A DOCTOR'S RECIPES FOR KEEPING WELL

Some Paragraphic Health Hints For the Home, Covering Matters of Diet and Clothing

A bedroom without sunlight will be safer if it has plain walls, without mouldings or shelves, doors and windows without projecting frames, rounded corners, hardwood floors and very simple furnishings. The room should be aired out a part of each day. The windows should be open during sleeping hours.

People living in cities having an infected water supply cannot depend on filtration through paper. They must boil the water or filter it through some kind of properly kept porcelain filter. This filter must be kept clean or it is worse than no filter at all.

It is better to wear heavy dresses and light underwear than heavy underwear and light dresses. There is such a difference in the temperature from day to day and between outside and inside that clothing should be changeable. The outer wrap should be the adaptable one.

Sore throat in young or old should not be neglected. The first principle of treatment is—not to get it. Avoid overcrowded and overheated places, mouth breathing and coddling. Avoid contact with people who have sore throat.

Worry will cause insomnia, indigestion, loss of weight and loss of good looks. It makes people prematurely old and seldom brings profitable results. Think out a situation and then act. Don't worry and re-worry it along from day to day.

Fruit is a good adjunct to the diet. Do not depend upon it to build up the body or to replace the daily wear and tear. Eat it moderately [illegible] early in the morning or with the meals and remember that dirt and filth, and the spores [illegible] are just as harmful because they are perched on the red cheek of an apple.

Good ventilation is the [illegible] in the home, the school room and the office. Get the indoor thermometer habit. Don't let the temperature go above 68. High temperatures are harmful. Cool air is the essence of good ventilation.

Look on health matters with ordinary, every-day horse sense. Physical welfare is a matter of public interest as much or more than politics. Give the subject a little time now. It may save a lot in the future.

The prevention of obesity rests on regulation of diet, habits and exercise. No more food should be taken than can be used up by the body. The real burning up of the food is not accomplished in the stomach, but in the lungs and muscles. Keep them both active.

The three important factors in the treatment of tuberculosis are food, rest and fresh air. Meat, eggs and milk in generous quantities are the staple articles of diet. The process of overfeeding must be carefully watched and indigestion prevented.

Diphtheria infection may locate on the gums, the nose or the tonsils or in any one of several places. Diphtheria located on previously healthy tonsils requires less antitoxin, is more easily cured than diphtheria anywhere else. Try to keep the tonsils clean and healthy.

Biliousness is produced by improper digestion of food which results in the formation of injurious substances which enter the blood and give rise to headaches and other symptoms of the complaint. People who have torpid livers should eat plain food, slowly, and exercise daily.

WHAT NAMES MEAN

Interesting Derivation of Some Commonly Used Names for Girls

Nowadays there is not so much importance attached to the meaning of names, but in far away ages a child's name had some direct personal application. It may have indicated some peculiarity in its appearance, some quality desired for it, some jewel, flower, animal or weapon that was supposed to have some influence over the child such as Deborah, the bee; Samuel, asked of God.

Though children's names are not given with the old care and attention, yet it is always interesting to know the character of the people who originated our own.

The name Dorothy, with its many [illegible] and abbreviations is a great favorite, and truly the meaning is unsurpassed. "The Gift of God." Well can we imagine the joy of the mother who first named her baby girl Theodora. "Theodora" is the English of the Greek Theos or Zeus, who was the chief god of the Greeks. Zeus was the god of heaven, their creator, and the object of their highest worship, and the word Theodora means "divine gift." The English form, "Dorothea," in which the word is merely inverted, is first found in the legend of St. Dorothea, an early Christian martyr, who dropped roses from Paradise upon the earth as a testimony of her heavenly home and joy.

The diminutive Dolly formed so common a pet name in the days of Queen Elizabeth that the wooden puppets played with by the children were invariably given this name, which survives to this day in our little girls' best loved toys. Other variations of the name are Dora, Dorinda, and Doris.

The Greek god Helios, who drove his flaming chariot across the heavens each day, was the God of Light, his name coming from the root ele, meaning "light." From this one word we now have Helena, Helen, Elaine, Ellen, Eleanor, Elinor, Nelly, Leonora, Nora, Eileen, and Lena.

When washing china with gilt upon it never use soda. Rub a little soap on the dishcloth to make a nice lather, then rinse in clear cold water.

MOTOR-CYCLISTS' FEAT

Mr. J. H. Lowcock, of Beckenham, and Mr. Aubrey Selby, of Bromley, Kent, succeeded in an attempt to ascend Ben Nevis on a motor-cycle. The character of the task may be judged from the fact that the two men found it necessary to take turns in riding up the steep and rugged slopes of the mountain. Their machines were equipped with specially strong tires for the purpose of the climb. Mr. Lowcock and Mr. Selby went to Scotland for the special purpose of the feat which they succeeded in accomplishing.

Ben Nevis is over 4,400 feet high, and has a circumference of over twenty-four miles at the base. Fort William is the favored starting point for tourists intending to ascend the mountain. Precipices of great depth are on its northern side, and in some of the fissures the snow remains unmelted even in the warmest summer.—London Tit-Bits.

Speedy Redskin Pitcher

In the Standing Rock Reservation of Montana there is a young Crow Indian of whom great things are predicted as a baseball pitcher. The redskin is only seventeen years old, and as yet has never seen a big league team play. He answers to the name of "Crow Skin." His catcher is the reservation physician, a big man and an ex-college player, who declares that the young brave has the fastest ball that he has ever seen, and that means Johnson, Smoky Joe Wood, and all the rest. Crow Skin will not be allowed by Uncle Sam to leave the reservation until he is twenty-one.

MAGISTRATE'S JUDGMENT IN TURKEY CASE

Charge Against Woman, Alleged to Have Sold Diseased Fowl, Dismissed by Police Magistrate Dumble

In the police court Saturday morning the charge against Mrs. H. L. McIlmoyle that she had sold a turkey unfit for food was dismissed.

Saturday week Mrs. McIlmoyle was charged with having sold a diseased turkey to a Peterborough woman. The purchaser said she found the bird's liver to be diseased, showing yellow and brown spots on it. Sanitary Inspector Spence, on being called in, condemned the fowl, which he consigned to the garbage can.

Mrs. McIlmoyle, it appears, sold the bird in good faith, with no intention of imposing upon the purchaser. Mr. McIlmoyle, to the press, says he offered to buy the bird back so that it could be held in evidence. On learning that the fowl had been made away with through the garbage can, he questioned the Inspector's authority to thus destroy the evidence in the charge he had made against his wife. Mr. Spence had admitted that the disease he contended the bird to have been afflicted with might not be discovered while the turkey was living.

This case came up again before Police Magistrate Dumble Saturday morning, when his worship, in his judgment, ruled that the prosecution had not proved to any degree of satisfaction that though the bird was diseased, it was unfit for food. This was a quasi-criminal charge and he did not feel justified in making a conviction against the defendant, who did not know the fowl was diseased. Two of the same flock had been sold elsewhere in the city and they had proved to be in perfect condition.

Mr. [illegible] conducted the defence and Mr. Whitfield appeared for the city.

An Appeal to the Intelligent Investor!

Does a logical presentation of a good investment interest you? Do you believe there is an oil in commercial quantities in Alberta? If you are alive to the situation you do. Then it will pay you to investigate our proposition and our holdings.

Please Read Carefully and Note!

THAT Oil authorities are agreed the Alberta Oil Field is of an anticlinal formation. It has been fairly accurately ascertained in what general direction these anticlines run. Geologist B. W. THAT Cunningham Craig, one of the world's most eminent geologists, selected the site of the Mowbray-Berkeley well. Stock in that company is not offered at any price. FAIRIES AND ELVES OUR OWN ANCESTORS

Quaint Theory of a Learned Professor Makes Missing Link Quite Lovable

A fascinating theory that the elves, pixies and fairies of folk-lore were real dwarfs, the [illegible] little people who were man's remotest ancestors, was advanced by Professor Hastings Gilford, in a lecture at the Royal College of Surgeons, London.

"There is a common impression," he said, "that scientists believe we are descended from brutes like the formidable adult apes of tropical forests. This is a mistake, and there is much reason to believe that our ancestors were akin to the intelligent, affectionate, lovable little baby chimpanzees, orang or gorillas which are so much like human babies in their appearance and disposition.

"Fossil remains of our pre-historic ancestors," he said, "have been found here and there which throw much light on our ancestry. Some of these skeletons are of a big, coarse brutish type. These are not necessarily the bones of our remote forefathers, but are very likely degenerate, ape-like offshoots from the main stock. Other bones have been found belonging to a more elegantly-formed, shorter people, with big heads, and other features similar to those seen in modern children.

"Such dwarfs are known to have existed over large tracts of the earth's surface, and there is reason to believe that they represent the childhood of our race. Some of these little people have left pictures of themselves carved upon [illegible] or upon bone, and the figures they represent are in some respects wonderfully like those of children of the present day.

"The testimony of tradition," said the Professor, "as handed down from generation to generation in the form of folk stories or fairy tales, afforded valuable support. These short people went by the name of pixies, fairies, elves, little people, etc. They are," he said, "characterized by a mixture of quaint shrewdness and simplicity. They are fond of dancing, of music, of processions, and were active, [illegible], good-natured, capricious. Even their appearance is described, and in appearance, in habits, in tastes, and in disposition they are invariably childish.

"In these legends we often hear, too, of giants—dull-witted, strong, brutal, of coarse tastes, often cannibals and at enmity with the little people. These giants represent the big, ape-like, muscular, coarse men whose brute-like bones have been alluded to above. We talk of these little people as if they died out ages ago leaving no more than legends of their existence, but there is reason to believe that they still linger, not greatly altered, in certain remote corners of the earth's surface."

Professor Gilford said the child of civilization playing with bows and arrows, delighting in music and dancing, in living animals, birds' nesting, and the glow and crackle of bonfires, and dreading the dark, made one think of the children of the race whose small bones, pictures, and legendary records showed that the manhood of yesterday was the childhood of today.

Over Cliff to Save Dog

The Penarth, Wales, police effected the rescue of a spaniel dog which had fallen over the cliffs at Penarth, and had secured a foothold 40 feet from the summit. Sergeant Lewis and Police-Constables Davies and Humphries formed the rescue party, the constables in turn being lowered over the edge of the cliff with a stout rope fastened beneath their arms. Humphries secured the dog, and together, policeman and dog were hauled up the cliff, which at this spot is almost perpendicular.

RICHES OF MEXICO

Vast Storehouse of Mineral Wealth—That's Why It Attracts

"Mexico is the land of big stakes. Humboldt called it 'The treasure house of the world.' It is all that and more."

A man who has spent years of his life on the south of the Rio Grande, was talking and this was the burden of his talk.

He told of a subterranean lake of oil, known to be 200 miles long and from 15 to 30 miles wide, with a "gusher" that flowed more than 100,000 barrels in 24 hours before it was "capped" and regulated; of valleys filled with oil in that 24 hours.

He told of ore that assayed $50,000 to the ton, and hundreds of tons of it in sight.

"Under Spanish rule," said the man from Mexico, "the mines of Guanajuato alone produced over $1,000,000,000 worth of silver. The mine owners made millions so quickly that one of the Spanish viceroys was forced to issue an order forbidding them from scattering handfuls of silver on the streets because it increased the number of beggars.

"Well, it isn't very different now. For instance, there's Pedro Alvarado, the owner of the [illegible] mine. He is an ignorant Indian who has no idea how much money he has, nor any idea of its value. In the last few years he has built 50 churches, at least 100 schools, and has given away several fortunes. One Christmas Pedro Alvarado gave away $2,000,000 to the poor 'for the love of God,' he said.

"Why, there are lots of creeks or streams, particularly in Sonora, where a peon or a Chinaman can make from $5 to $10 a day washing for gold with an ordinary pan. They call these little streams 'poor man's banks.'"

DEVELOPING A SUPERMAN

Siberia Should Produce One If Eugenic Theory Counts For Anything

Siberia's unique population should possess considerable interest for the eugenists, says a well known medical journal. From [illegible] until 1900, from 2,000 to 20,000 Russians were exiled annually to Siberia, mainly for voicing ideas and opinions which favored democracy and other modern theories; in other words, the inhabitants of the territory seem always to have been men and women of original habits of thought, of mental qualifications which would have made them prominent and distinguished under a form of government more like our own.

As we understand it, these exiles have lived an outdoor life, rigorous perhaps, but of the most healthful kind. Consequently we find in Siberia a most unusual combination of intellectual equipment of high quality with physical surroundings adapted to furnish bodily vigor and excellent health, a union produced by accident of the exact kind that eugenists are striving to effect by design.

The colonization of Siberia by the method above referred to practically ceased more than a dozen years ago. There should be now, even in the absence of first rate schools, a population with most exceptional gifts, veritable supermen if the theories of the eugenists are soundly based.

SAFETY IN COAL MINES

Steam Will Dampen Dust and Prevent Explosions

The fact that dry bituminous coal dust will explode under certain conditions has been proved both by the experience of the past and by laboratory tests and is now generally admitted by all coal men.

That coal dust may be rendered inert by the proper application of moisture has been shown both by laboratory tests and by the absence of explosions at mines in which moisture is present in the proper proportion to the quantity of dust produced. The result of an investigation of the humidity of mine air, carried out by the Bureau of Mines, leads to the belief that steam may be applied to the intake air in such a way as to offer the most economical and efficient method of dampening coal dust.

The Arms of Glasgow

The explanation of the coat of arms of Glasgow is curious. On it are an oak tree with a bell hanging on one of its branches, a bird at the top of the tree, and a salmon, with a ring in its mouth, at the base. St. Kentigern, in the seventh century, took up his abode on the site of the present city of Glasgow. Upon an oak in the clearing he hung a bell to summon the savages to worship, hence the oak and bell. A queen, having formed an attachment to a soldier, gave him a precious ring which the king had given her. The king, aware of the fact, stole upon the soldier in sleep, abstracted the ring, threw it into the Clyde, and then asked the queen for it. The queen, in alarm, applied to St. Kentigern, who went to the Clyde, caught a salmon with the ring in its mouth, handed it to the queen, and was thus the means of restoring peace to the Royal couple.

FIRST CANARIES WERE NOT YELOW

Canaries sell in Canada for from $. to $10 apiece, according to their singing ability, but it is not an uncommon thing at all in Germany to have $125 paid for one of the birds. Many immigrants coming to Canada have brought their canaries with them even if the cages were cumbersome to carry and other things seemingly of more worth, had to be left behind.

The Englishman and the German is not happy unless he has a canary warbling to him when he comes home from work. Many instances have been known of people buying canaries even when they had not enough money to buy food, because they had lost their pets in moving to their new houses.

The original canary, of course, came from the Canary Isles, where the species is still found in abundance. The native bird sings sweetly if not scientifically as its educated relations. The wild birds are not yellow in color, but are mostly of gray plumage. In confinement, due to climate, food, and the intermixture of breeds, white, grey, green, and brown, as well as yellow shades are produced.

FROM ROD AND CHAIN TO PROUD POSITION

Lieutenant-Governor Hendrie of Ontario Started Busy Career With Surveyor's Gang

It was no surprise to those who have watched the career of the man when Lt.-Col. John Strathearn Hendrie, C.V.O., M.P.P., was elevated to the distinction of Lieutenant-Governor of the Province of Ontario. It was one of the essential steps in the working of a career which gave great promise ever since the youthful days when he started out upon the climbing highway of life by carrying a rod and chain for an engineer's gang on railway construction.

Of the physical type which gives evidence of latent power, of the mental capacity which has enabled him to grasp great problems in the commercial world, of the [illegible] which has permitted him to gain [illegible] of the popular [illegible] of his fellow-citizens, of the political [illegible] which has won the [illegible] of his fellows, John Strathearn Hendrie is now reaping the harvest of his earlier industry.

Colonel Hendrie is still [illegible] [illegible]

There is Scotch blood in his veins, both parents having [illegible]

Ayrshire, and he is also of Huguenot descent. His education was received at the Hamilton public and private schools and at Upper Canada College, after which he [illegible] [illegible] He became [illegible] [illegible] of the Hamilton Bridge Works.

Hamilton, being Col. Hendrie's home city, gave him all his honors, except the last. His business enterprises have been diversified, but it was not until he was chosen Mayor of Hamilton in 1901 that his merits as a citizen were recognized in tangible form.

Elected to the Legislature

The following year saw him in the Provincial Legislature as a follower of Sir James Whitney. Recognition from the Ontario Government came in 1905 when he was selected a Commissioner for the Hydro-Electric, and the same year saw him admitted to the Cabinet as a Minister without portfolio.

In and about the chambers of Parliament Col. Hendrie is looked upon as a silent man, somewhat [illegible], and when upon the floor of the House no one can accuse him of verbosity. One who has watched the proceedings of Parliament for years vouches for the statement that in his last four sessions he did not make a speech in the House. One might see him sauntering into the chamber hours after the deliberations began, apparently paying little attention to the routine of Parliament, sinking back in his chair and watching with the attitude of one to whom all this was an old story. But while Col. Hendrie watched in silence, he also worked.

As a Soldier

In the military world his ardor was felt for years. His first activity came when he linked his interests with the 4th Battery of Canadian Field Artillery, in which company he had risen to the rank in 1900. It is interesting to note that Col. Hendrie has always been an advocate of compulsory military training. In private life a fondness for horses has been one of his features, and he has done much to promote that sport. He is a member of many clubs and also a past president of the Canadian Artillery Association, the decoration of C.V.O. coming during his command of the Canadian Artillery at Queen Victoria's Diamond Jubilee in 1897.

HEROES OF SHAFT AT NIAGARA PLANT

Three electrical workers went in a punt down through a raging torrent that choked a power company's tunnel along the mighty cliff that holds up the weight of Niagara Falls. Three men with three boxes of dynamite groped their way in pitch blackness through a circular chamber swirling with water in order to blast out ten tons of rock lodged unexpectedly in the tunnel's "spout." They failed. And then what? A few days later they did what mortal men have done neither before nor since; they climbed up the face of Niagara Falls from the outside, crawled under the curtain of water that leaps out from the giant cliffs and placed a charge of dynamite in the mouth of the tunnel. That time they were successful. The channel was cleared without the loss of a life. Here is the second trip as told by one of the men:

"Although we were dressed in oilskins, oil hats and rubber boots, we were quickly drenched to the bones by gusts of spray that tumbled on our heads and backs like pails of buckshot. So great became the force of these gusts that we could stand upright no longer and crawled from boulder to boulder on our hands and knees. All this time we were advancing directly under Niagara Falls, for the [illegible] was falling over and slightly beyond us, now and then giving us an extra heavy swish of water as the winds in the gorge blew direct against the face of the fall.

"We were walking about a hundred feet up from the pool, bracing ourselves against the pile of rocks. It was, at first, an almost impossible task to make steady progress. So we kept some distance apart for safety's sake in the event of one having a tumble, and by taking our medicine patiently at every downpour sent our way, we finally reached the ledge directly under the tunnel's mouth. It was a matter of a few minutes to place the dynamite and wires where they would hit the blockade to best advantage.

"We rested a few minutes and commenced the return journey. Bad as the approach had been, the going back was infinitely worse. The adverse winds had practically isolated us by walls of water and indeed at one time the prospect was good for a twenty-four-hour stay on the edge of an ugly cavern.

"During a lull we were enabled to make another start. Having to drag the pair of copper wires with us made the trip much more difficult, but we held on and gained foot after foot, sometimes slipping, often bringing blood, until the sight of the Cave of the Winds passed through the almost [illegible]. [illegible] was slowing down our steps, and a fearful hunger [illegible] the adventure had taken the best part of a day. I remember some one throwing us a rope and we snatched at it with a sudden return of energy.

"Lifted safely into the cave, the superintendent touched the copper wires. A far-off roar, that sounded even above the boom of the falls—and we turned to face a messenger who had been waiting at the telephone for instant news of the water level in the tunnel. 'It is rapidly lowering,' said he, and all of us knew that the blockade had been broken by the blast."

WILLIAM SULZER

William Sulzer who was impeached from the Governorship of New York State was born to be a politician and a leader of men. He had an uphill fight all along the way, but by either genius or good luck never has been shelved. His father, Thos. Sulzer, was a politician before him, so much so that he suffered imprisonment for a cause he believed in. The elder Sulzer was a German patriot and a comrade of General Sigel and General Schurz. He was a strong advocate of constitutional liberty, and while a student at Heidelberg University, joined the patriots in a revolution. He was captured and imprisoned, but through clever manoeuvring managed to escape to Switzerland. He came to this continent immediately and upon cast his lot with the Democratic forces. This was in 1851. The elder Sulzer married soon after he arrived here and settled in Elizabeth, N.J. His wife was from Dutch and Scotch-Irish stock. They lived in the New Jersey city for several years, and there William Sulzer was born. Soon afterward they removed to New York, and young Sulzer, who was exceedingly bright as a boy, was sent to the Public schools and was graduated, despite the fact that it cost many a hard effort and sacrifice on the part of his father and mother. Afterward he was sent to Columbia University, where he studied law. Both in the Public school and at college he was recognized as a forcible speaker. As early as 1884 when Mr. Sulzer was but twenty-one years old, he attracted attention as a masterly orator.

Market for Flax Fibre

As a considerable quantity of flax is harvested in Canada every year, the attention of firms interested may be drawn to the market in Leeds, England, for flax fibre. Spinners there have followed with close attention the development of the growth of the flax plant in Western Canada, and are desirous of receiving shipments of the fibre if it can be obtained on competitive terms with supplies from other sources. Some three years ago a few small trial shipments of [illegible] flax fibre were sent from Canada. Mr. J. M. Mussen, Canadian trade commissioner at Leeds, says that spinners express their readiness to give their consideration to offers that may be received at any time from Canadian firms interested in sending [illegible] [illegible] for this fibre.

KING GEORGE'S

WHIPPET RACING AN ENGLISH SPORT

Speedy Little Animals Very Popular in North—They Get the Very Best of Care

In England, the racing dog, or whippet, might almost be called the poor man's racehorse, for these races are particularly popular amongst the workingmen in the North and Midlands, and also, to a lesser degree, in the South. The whippet resembles a miniature greyhound; he wears a neat cloth coat and a perforated leather muzzle. This prevents him from picking up stray scraps of harmful food, which would not be good for him when training. It also prevents "doping" just before a race.

The different competitors in a race are distinguished from one another by means of different colored collars; and, in order to judge the winner, the judge has a small pit prepared in a line with the winning-post, so that, when he gets into pit he is on a level with the dogs, and can see which first crosses the line without any difficulty.

The length of a whippet race is generally from 150 to 200 yards, and the heavier dogs are handicapped when racing against lighter competitors. Each dog is held by a man who acts as starter, and this starting of the whippets is in itself quite an art. The starter holds his dog by the back of the neck and the base of the tail. At the sound of the starting-pistol the man slightly raises the dog from the ground, and tosses him forward. The idea is to drop the dog so that his hind legs touch the ground first, and he can then take up his stride at once.

A good whippet will complete 200 yards in 12 seconds, or 16 yards 2 feet per second. Whippets are trained to race by means of what is technically known as the "rag," or, in other words, a piece of cloth. The animal is taught to run to the man who waves a "rag" at him, and it is in order to reach the rag-wavers that the whippets run down the racecourse at full speed.

The men with the rags stand on the far side of a line ten yards beyond the winning-post. The rag-wavers are placed thus, instead of standing at the winning-post, because the dogs then pass the post going at full speed. If the rag-wavers stood at the post, the dogs would naturally slow up before they reached them, and the race would consequently be spoiled.

The little whippet has a very good time in his master's house. He is very carefully looked after, and is often the pet of the whole family. His diet probably consists largely of bread and mutton, and he is taken out for systematic gallops after the rag. He is groomed as carefully as a racehorse by his devoted owner.

TENNIS FOR LONG LIFE

Thirty Ex-champions Sat Down Together at Banquet

In point of physique and weight, Maurice E. McLoughlin is the most youthful tennis champion the United States ever had. He is only twenty-three years old, and at his best playing weight he tips the scale at 150. The muscular though short Beals C. Wright, the strong William A. Larned, the tall, graceful William J. Clothier, all were mature when they carried the laurels now held by McLoughlin, and all of these champions of a few years ago scaled, when playing tennis, at over 160 pounds. Wright, on one occasion, lost eight pounds in one championship match.

No stronger contrast of tennis champions was ever presented than when, with the exception of three, every champion of the United States for the past thirty-three years sat around a table to celebrate the return of the Davis Cup. If any commendations were needed for tennis that table loudly voiced its claim. There is probably no other sport that can show such a clear roll-call of champions for a similar length of time. McLoughlin promises to be another physical advertisement for tennis. He is rugged and strong, never afraid of donning the gloves in a friendly bout and can hold his own in a number of other sports. Certainly his physique belies any hint that tennis is a game for the weakling.

CHANCE'S BIG INCOME

Some eight years ago Frank Chance was made manager of the Cubs. At that time he had a bank account of $7,000. When Charles Taft and Charles Murphy bought Hart's interest in the Chicago team they declared Chance in for 10 per cent. of the stock. He paid for it with his dividends. Chance admits that he is now worth $300,000. For looking into the lens of a moving picture camera for 25 minutes he was paid $1,000. His salary for his first season with the New York Americans was $25,000. He owns a 24-acre orange grove in California, and modestly calculates that his yearly income is about $55,000.

Must Pay Good Players

"You can't do anything with cheap talent," says Frank Chance, manager of the New York Americans. "You've got to pay top-notch players big salaries to keep them going. I'd rather have five $5,000-a-year men on my club than fifty $2,000-a-year men. The high-priced man usually plays major league ball." Chance's method of rebuilding a team is simple. He believes in buying every man, with no regard to price, that appeals to him.

Another Generous Rich Man

The rich men of this city who only spend part of their incomes, are daily coming to the help of the War Fund. Yesterday a local rich man authorized the press to say that he offers to give all the wood from two trees that shadow his garden and prevent vegetables growing as profusely as they should in a rich man's garden, to the War Fund. He only stipulates that the Fund shall cut the trees down and leave him the first twenty feet of the trunks.

A Lindsay Lunatic (?)

Lindsay Nov. 27.—In John Mahoney Chief Short has on his hands one of the most mysterious characters that ever came under his notice as a police officer. He is a man of mystery. Mahoney was arrested in the South Ward. Word has been received at police headquarters that a man had been acting strangely in the southeast section of the town. Chief Short went to investigate. He was taken to the police station where the chief proceeded to interrogate him. He struck a snag, however, and could get nothing out of the man save that his name was Mahoney. He appeared to be in a trance, and it was thought that a night's rest would refresh his memory. In the morning he was brought before Police Magistrate Jackson for examination. He said he was a native of Dundee, Scotland, but had been in this country twelve years. The past seemed like a closed book. He remembered being in Toronto General Hospital at one time for some mental derangement.

TORONTO HOME GUARD IS A FINE BODY

Ottawa, Nov. 27.—Major General Hughes announced today that Mr. C.B. Gordon and other Montreal men had offered to equip an automobile machine gun battery. This offer has been accepted and the battery will be attached to the second contingent. Mr. Gordon was in Toronto yesterday to select the motor trucks.

It is understood that this battery will be similar to that equipped by Hon. Clifford Sifton and others for the first contingent. Mr. J. C. Eaton, of Toronto, is also equipping another battery at the present time, the trucks for which have been ordered.

A mobile gun battery includes some half dozen machine guns mounted on armored automobiles with other machine guns that can be taken off and mounted on tripods. Some twenty trucks altogether are used for ammunition, supplies, ambulance and the red cross equipment.

It is understood Major Edward Holland, of Ottawa, who won his Victoria Cross in South Africa, will be in command of the battery.

Major Holland was with the machine gun battery in South Africa when the famous "Gat" Howard lost his life.

It will be several days before the details of organization and mobilization of the additional twenty thousand men (to make up the fifty thousand which it has been decided to recruit) will be announced. The military headquarters staff have been working on plans which were laid before Major-General Hughes this morning. He at once had a conference with Sir Robert Borden and the plans will likely be approved by the Cabinet today or tomorrow. However, as already announced, it is expected that Ontario will be asked for five regiments, Quebec two, Maritime Provinces two and the West two.

In the meantime recruits are being received at all divisional headquarters so that there is no delay in enlisting. While no official reports at headquarters have been received, unofficial advices are that not only is the full 17,000 needed for the second contingent already recruited but the 20,000 which it was first decided to ask for has now enlisted. Little difficulty is expected in securing the additional men to bring Canada's army up to the full fifty thousand to be kept in training this winter.

General Hughes expressed delight today with the Toronto Home Guard, who he reviewed last night. He said that they were a splendid body of men and made an exceptionally good appearance despite the fact that they were in mufti. He emphasized the fact that they were nearly all business men with property who had undertaken this service from a keen sense of duty. They were very serious in their work. The question of giving the Home Guard official recognition and of organizing it into a new Toronto regiment will be taken in the course of the next few days.

FOE'S INFANTRY VERY PRONE TO SURRENDER

The German infantry has to be credited with a very stubborn courage, but it was, so far as can be judged, chiefly "officers' courage." Left to themselves, the German infantrymen were prone to surrender, though the same men under their officers would suffer the most severe punishment without flinching. The virtues and defects alike of the German military system concentrated in the infantry. Educated, partly by godly precept, partly by brutality, into believing that the military officer is a being apart, worthy of worship, the German rank and file follow their officers or are driven forward by their officers, in positions which seem almost desperate. On the other hand, the German rank and file full deprived of their officers, are more helpless than French or British soldiers in the same circumstances. In entrenching himself the German soldier is as good as the best (book work and methodical practice.) In taking advantage of natural cover he is far inferior to the British (absence of initiative). The virtues and defects alike of his training lead him to the charge in close platoons. Thus he is easier to kill but more terrible if he arrives. His marksmanship is inferior to that of the British soldier, but his volley firing—helped by the fat targets of [illegible] is not [illegible].

[illegible] at all stages of [illegible] when the order to advance is given, the German tactics is nevertheless careful of its infantry in that it prefers a very thorough artillery preparation and, as I have noted before, the artillery follows the infantry [illegible] way.

WEDDING BELLS

Ella Sheard — T. F. Livingstone.

Toronto, Nov. 26.—Yesterday afternoon at 3 o'clock the marriage was solemnized at the residence of Mrs. Henry Sheard, in Grosvenor street, of her daughter, Ella Gertrude, to Mr. Thornton Fleming Livingstone, only son of the late Mr. Robert Livingstone, Aurora, and of Mrs. Livingstone. The ceremony was performed by the Rev. R. J. Simpson, pastor of the Carlton street Methodist Church, in the bow window of the drawing room, which was a forest of palms and chrysanthemums, and aisle being formed with heavy white cords leading to the window, where a white and gold kneeling stool was arranged for the bride and groom, the large drawing-rooms accommodating the seventy guests easily. The wedding music was played by the favorite orchestra, and Miss Gladys Jones, London, sang the "Happy Song" after the ceremony. The hall and the staircase was beautifully decorated with palms, ferns and white chrysanthemums, the orchestra playing behind a screen of tall phoenix leaves. The dining-room was arranged with yellow chrysanthemums and ferns, and the bride's table with white roses and lilies. The beautiful fair bride, who was brough in and given away by her brother, Dr. Robert H. Sheard, wore a white gown of satin with basque and court train trimmed with seed pearls, with overdress of Chantilly lace. Her veil was of tulle and lace trimmed with pearls, and crowned with orange blossoms, and she carried a bouquet of orchids and lilies of the valley, and wore the groom's present, a pearl necklace. Miss Florence Mallory was maid of honor, wearing pale blue satin with white tunic and black velvet picture hat with blue, and she carried an armful of Beauty roses. Miss Pearl Carlson, Peterboro, was bridesmaid, in shell pink ninon and lace, with black velvet picture hat, and an armful of pink tea roses. Mr. William O. Gowland was best man. The groom's gift to the bride's attendants were necklaces of pink coral roses and pearls and to the best man a silver-mounted snakewood stick. Mrs. Sheard held a reception after the ceremony wearing a gown of black crepe de chine and ninon. Mrs. Livingstone, who was also present, wore black. The Rev. R.J. Simpson proposed the bride's health. Mr. and Mrs. Livingstone left for the Eastern States by the 5.20 o'clock train, the latter wearing a black tailor-made trimmed with fur and a hat to match, and a stole and muff of ermine.

RUSSIANS TAKE TEN MILES OF TRENCHES; FOE FLEES IN PANIC

Germans Placed in Tight Corner Through Failure to Hold on—Must Retreat, But Offer Big Battle—Reinforcements for Enemy Helps Only At Few Points

Petrograd, Nov. 30.— Six hundred prisoners, seven guns and many wounded fell into Russian hands in yesterday's fighting to the west of Lowicz, where the Russians took ten miles of German trenches between Glovno and Sobota, according to information received to-day through trust-worthy sources.

Glovno is sixteen miles northeast of Lodz and Sobota is twelve miles to the north of Glovno. The trenches were protected by [illegible] earthwork and wire entanglements.

Kaiser Sends Help.

It is semi-officially announced that the Germans have received reinforcements in the shape of two infantry divisions and one cavalry division.

Germans in Tight Corner.

Military experts are of the opinion that the German position around Lodz today is far more critical than it was during the initial advance around Warsaw a month ago.

They point out that the German army is 20 miles from Thorn, its base and the fact that the occupation of its present position was so precipitate indicates that the line of retreat was not well organized.

The Enemy Handicapped

Military observers also maintain that the Germans will be greatly handicapped by the withdrawal even, should they execute the movement in fairly good order.

The extent of the Russian advance in East Prussia between the Mazur Lakes and the River Angerapp is officially stated to be one day's march.

649 CANADIANS HAVE APPLIED FOR NINE AVIATION POSTS

Ottawa, Nov. 30.—A Canadian aviation corps is being organized at Salisbury Plains and will be attached to the Canadian army when it leaves for the front. Negotiations have been in progress between Canada and the British War Office for some time and it has now been decided to form a squadron of twelve aeroplanes. The squadron will be in command of Captain Janney, of Galt, Ontario, an experienced aviator. Capt. Janney flew from Massachusetts to Valcartier camp to join the first contingent.

There are two other Canadian aviators, H. Sharpe and Harry A. Farr, and for the remaining posts there are no less than 646 applicants among Canadian soldiers at Salisbury Plains who want to join the aviation corps.

The British type of flying machine which has proved so successful along the fighting line in France and Belgium has been adopted and orders for the building of twelve have been placed, it is understood, by the Canadian Government in England. The Canadian airmen will likely train, according to news received at Ottawa, at Montrose, Scotland, which is one of the British aviation centres.

GERMAN MARINES MARCHED TOWARD YSER WHERE THEY KNOW DEATH WAITS

London, Nov. 30.—A despatch to the Exchange Telegraph Company from Amsterdam says:

Friday morning fresh German marines who recently arrived at Bruges marched toward the Yser. Some were singing; others were crying, as the Yser had a bad reputation. A high officer addressed the troops at Bruges Thursday and promised to take them to Calais.

"Several natives of Flanders were arrested after the bombardment of Zeebrugge as spies."

Send More Boys to Doom

Great activity prevails around Ghent and Bruges, as large movements of troops are taking place in the direction of the Yser. Only small detachments remain at Ghent, Bruges, Eecloo, Thourout, St. Nicholas, Deynze and Thielt. The troops left Ghent on Friday night via Chaussee de Courtrai, in the direction of Ypres. On Thursday evening two trainloads of young soldiers, most of them being between 17 and 18 years old, arrived at the St. Pierre station at Ghent, passing the night in the station and in the Leopold barracks, and left for Ypres. German soldiers say that the Germans are going to make a supreme effort to cross the Yser. It seems they have concentrated a great numbers of troops there, and therefore the officer considers that they will have success.

Germans in Low Spirits

The troops who started for the front at Ypres were in low spirits. It is even said that at Bruges there was a mutiny among the German soldiers. The details are not forthcoming, but it is stated that some soldiers have been arrested and conveyed to Ghent. At any rate, on Wednesday evening I saw there about 100 German soldiers in irons guarded by soldiers with fixed bayonets. They passed the Rue de Courtrai in the direction of the St. Pierre railway station. In one of the Ghent hotels a German officer had committed suicide. The Germans are again moving up heavy guns at Zeebrugge. Twelve of these guns came from Aix la Chapelle. Numbers of troops, including field artillery, have passed through Cologne on the way to the Russian frontier. These troops were withdrawn from the battle front in France, where they had been for about two months.

France Did Not Desire This War Final Triumph Will go to Allies

Nesle, by auto to Paris, France, Nov. 30.—"General Joffre, commander in chief of the French army received me with other correspondents of the neutral countries appointed to make the tour of the battle front, at the city hall here to-day. He made a special trip from his headquarters for that purpose and in an interview stated the cause of France for the neutral countries of the world.

"'France did not desire this war,' the commander of the French army said. 'It was thrust upon her, but now the nation is prepared for any sacrifice and she will do her duty to the absolute end until final success crowns her efforts.'

"General Joffre said we had undoubtedly been able to observe the excellent spirit of the troops at the front.

"'I hope that you have been able to see all that you wished to see of our fighting forces,' he added and then he shook hands with us bidding us good bye. He repeated: 'This is a war for humanity, and the final triumph will be ours.'

"General Joffre is a man of action and not of words. His departure from headquarters to meet the party of newspaper men from neutral countries is therefore unprecedented. With occasional lightning like flashes, especially when he spoke of the triumph that must come to France, the eyes of General Joffre recalled those of Mark Twain in their kindly depths being stirred by passing emotion. General Joffre was clad in an extremely plain, simple uniform. He wore no decorations or ribbons denoting honours which have been accorded him, although he is the possessor of the most important decorations. The French army commander has an artistic hand. His fingers are tapering; his nails are well kept, but the commander in chief's duties at the front had prevented him from shaving for a couple of days. General Joffre received us cordially with dignity as befits his manner but without the slightest pose; he shook hands with a firm grasp, looking each one squarely in the eye. His gaze became searching. He talked directly at each one of his interviewers."

RAILWAY BUILDING in Canada

As you loll back in the luxurious arm chair of the Observation Car of the Imperial Limited, after having been served with tea, perhaps in the same manner that you would be served in your own home or at your favorite club, you do not realize, and even little care about the enormous cost of the road of steel over which you are speeding. Your chief thought if you have one, regarding the railway, is that the track is smooth and the cars do not jolt you as they swing around the curves.

Railway construction is the heaviest kind of work. Nature and all of her allies seem bent on preventing the building of this narrow connecting path of commerce. Every foot is hard [illegible] for and costs heavily in life, labor and money. It is, [illegible], arduous work in every department. The first engineers were the [illegible] pioneers in every sense of the word and their labors consist of much more than surveying. In the early history of the Canadian Pacific the engineers were often called upon to thread wildernesses, little, if ever, trod before by white men. These engineers were also explorers and much of scientific data concerning the vast country to the west was gathered by the men sent out by this railway to locate its line to tide water on the Pacific Ocean.

Briefly, the general course of procedure for railway construction in Canada is about as follows, although, of course, it must be understood that such procedure varies greatly with individual cases as governed by local conditions:

An examination of traffic possibilities indicating that the construction of a line of railway between two given points is advisable, having been made, the first thing done is to make a general examination of the country under consideration, from which a map showing all the governing topographical routes are projected and those that appear most suitable are picked out for further study. This further study consists of running preliminary lines by means of chains, transit and level, from which the physical characteristics, such as distance, curvature, rise and fall, and approximate construction cost for each route can be determined.

It having been decided from these preliminary surveys as to which is the most economical route for the line under consideration, detailed location surveys are then made over this route and the centre line of the final location staked out.

GERMAN AND AUSTRIAN ARMIES ARE CUT IN TWO BY RUSSIANS

One Column of Germans Succeeded in Escaping, But With Heavy Loss—Cracow is Threatened—Russians Have Re-Taken Many Important Positions West of Lodz—Austrians Weakened by Complete Separation From German Forces

Petrograd, Nov. 30.—The advance of one and a half German army corps under General Francois from Breslau and Wielun, via Piotrkow, seems to have resulted in this column escaping capture, and by cutting away from Prasnitz and Koluski northeast through the Russian forces joining the German main army in the neighborhood of Lentchitza. The Russians from the Cracow front, moving north, cut the communications of this column, but the Russians from the Warsaw front did not envelope General Francois' force, which after a desperate dash, reached safety.

The German line, after two weeks' of fighting, extends from Mlava, Gostynin, Kutno and Lentchitza to a point west of Lodz. The Russians have retaken Piotrkow, Brzeziny, Glowno and Gombinen. It is not clear what permanent strategic advantage the Germans expect from the present invasion of Poland, unless it is to push the attack on Warsaw, which seemingly is not attainable. In the meantime the complete separation of the German from the Austrian armies appears to have weakened the latter. The Russians have forced the passage of the Raba River and taken [illegible], are approaching Cracow from the south. If Cracow falls the apparently unprotected condition of the Austro-German frontier would expose industrial Silesia to a Russian invasion. Hence the present German attempt seems to be a makeshift, because Russia appears to be able to push the campaign on Cracow and at the same time have sufficient forces to oust the Germans in the north

RUSSIAN WOMAN AVIATOR AT FRONT AUSTRIA CASUALTIES 919,000

Petrograd, Nov. 30.—Princess Shakhovskaya, the first woman aviator to be commissioned for war service by the Russian government, left for the front to-day. She will join the northwestern army, operating in East Prussia. Princess Shakovskaya applied for a commission as an army aviator earlier in the war, but was refused because it was feared that if she was captured by the Germans they might decide she was not entitled to the rights of a soldier, and orders be issued that she be shot as a spy.

Austria's Heavy Losses

Petrograd, Nov. 30. via London.—On the basis of the reports received in Petrograd from Hungary it is stated here to-day that Austro-Hungarian casualties to date amount to 19,000 officers and 900,000 men.

Six hundred prisoners, seven guns and many wounded fell into Russian hands in yesterday's fighting to the west of Lowicz where the Russians took ten miles of German trenches between Glovno and Sobota, according to information received to-day through trust-worthy sources.

THE FUTURE OF ORIENTAL AND CHEAP FOREIGN COMPETITION

At St. Paul's Bible Class, where they are now considering the ethics of Christian citizenship, and contrasting the laws of to-day with those of Rome and with those outlined in the scriptures generally, Mr. Burnham, M. P., proceeded with his address Sunday. Questions arising from his remarks of the previous Sunday were put and answered. The future of Oriental and foreign cheaper competition engaged the attention of the class. The questions asked contained the statement that if it was true as alleged that foreign cheap labour was a danger, how is it that it has not been so in the past, and is not the fact that it is inefficient, the real reason that is cheap and unable to compete with western labour? Mr. Burnham replied that the east was just awakening from its long sleep of prejudice against the west, and its chains of caste. The west, which had only recently developed itself; the U. S. wholly since the Civil War, and Germany since 1865, had by virtue of enterprise and capital acquired a long lead, but China had begun to ship the finest steel rails made to the U. S., paying the highest tariff and making a handsome profit. The writers on eastern peoples, the missionaries and travellers without exception praised the newly awakened intelligence and enterprise of the east, and prophesied that as the only lack was capital when it arrived the east would rival the west. The magnificent opportunities there and the new readiness to admit foreigners (heretofore an impossibility) was attracting capital. There were already existing immense factories in both India and China. Those who refused to see a menace to highly-paid western labour and the comfort and civilization of the masses of the western peoples, would wake up to it before long. In Western Canada and the U.S. unrestricted oriental immigration aroused the intense hostility of the people. Why? Because the foreigners worked for low wages, were capable and clever, and displaced Canadian and American labour. As it was with foreign cheap labour so is it with foreign labour's goods. They would swamp the Canadian and the U. S. trade market if not held back. The whole centre of gravity in the manufacturing and producing world might now, with the awakening of the east and the advent of capital, be changed. Now, too, when properly trained and led eastern troops are second to none; as shown at the allies' battle front, the east may strive for a complete independence of the domination and control of western powers. They have the labour, we have the capital. Put them both together, either in the west by immigration or in the east by the introduction of capital, and where will the masses of the western world be in a quarter of a century? The brotherhood of Man he said meant not intellectual equality but kind treatment.

THE PACKING OF APPLES

British Importers Favor Boxes Rather Than Barrels For Finer Grades

Interviews with British apple importers on the subject of packing in boxes or barrels indicate that the package is becoming a more important factor in trade than formerly, says a report issued by the Canadian Department of Trade and Commerce. "Which is the better package" cannot just be answered categorically. One class of package suits one trade, while another class of package is looked for by a different trade; a good deal depends on what trade is being catered for. There are certain varieties of apples more suitable for the box trade, and others more suitable for barrels. Apples of coarse texture, and whose appearance, so far as color is concerned, is not so good, can very readily be packed in barrels, while the apple with good appearance, whose texture is finer, and more suitable for dessert, should be packed in boxes. It will pay to do so, even at the extra cost of the box, packing and freight.

AMUSING THE LITTLE ONES

Useful Instruction Can Be Given In Guise of Play

It is not very difficult to keep the children busy and happy at home during the evening if a little careful thought is given the matter by the grown-ups.

Just one general thing must be observed. If the boys and girls have homework to do, this must be done before they start to spend the evening in any other way; otherwise, it probably will not get done at all.

Dolls and soldiers—both ever popular children's toys—offer endless ways of making time fly.

Start new ways of playing with them—play which has an undercurrent of usefulness. For example, you can have a doll's washing night once a week, when the children learn how to wash dolly's clothes in the right way. The latter part is important.

Instead of letting the children make a great mess with soap and water, mother should tell them how it is done—guide them in the intricacies of washing fine things; show the difference in washing flannels and cotton things; teach them how to starch and iron things, and so on. The children will love doing it, and at the same time they will be learning something that will be of the very greatest use to them in later life.

Dolly also can have a party, which will teach the children the simple laws of hospitality; while if Dolly happens to be ill there is an excellent opportunity for learning how to behave in a sick room.

With soldiers, "playing battles" rarely fails to charm and can be developed to a large extent. Even a camp may be started and the order of camp life instilled into the children—a help in the formation of confidence and reliance in their character.

It is quite a good plan to teach boys and girls knitting. Give them a weekly lesson, and let them have a weekly practice night "on their own." Make a rule that they are given all the things they use when they are finished and see that the knitting is done neatly. It is just as much fun as doing it in the wrong way, and gives far more all-round pleasure.

It seems to be always a good thing to encourage the spirit of thoughtfulness for others in children; and it is rather a nice idea to have occasional long evenings devoted to doing things for children who are worse off than themselves. All sorts of odds and ends—matchboxes, spools, and what not—can be turned into delightful toys by the children, and will give much pleasure to some poor child.

Scrapbooks, too, can be made with this idea in view. Scrapbook boxes can be kept right through the year, for the collection of suitable pictures from all sorts of sources, and then scrapbook making nights can be held during the winter—and the beauty of this employment is that all children can take a part in it. The very youngest can select the pictures, another can cut out, another paste in, another make paste, and so on.

NEW LIFE FOR RIBBONS

If Soiled or Faded There Are Ways of Restoring Them

There is an expert way to do so small a thing as washing ribbons.

The easiest, and perhaps the safest way is to put the ribbon into a fruit jar, fill the jar two-thirds full of naptha or gasoline and shake for at least five minutes, take ribbon out and rinse in another jar of clean gasoline or naptha. These jars may be kept, if tightly covered for future use. After rinsing stretch out straight and wind evenly around a large jar or smooth crock, not in draught, until dry. Do not iron.

Black ribbons, if not too soiled may be freshened by sponging with alcohol or strong borax water; if very dirty wash in warm water with little soap bark, in place of soap. Rinse in warm water, dry quickly, stretch on cloth covered table, tacking ribbon tight at each end.

Light shades of ribbon may be cleaned by rubbing them with cornmeal slightly dampened with gasoline. Lay ribbon on clean cloth on underside of ironing board and rub ribbon on both sides until perfectly clean. Hang out of doors in shade to dry.

Pink or cream colored ribbons that are only slightly soiled may be cleaned by rubbing them with fine bread crumbs. Do not roll or crease.

Bridesmaids Carry Canes

Many bridesmaids carry a flower trimmed cane instead of the usual shower bouquet. These canes are of the first empire style, enameled in white and trimmed with flowers and ribbons.

THE REFRIGERATOR NEEDS PROPER CARE

Some Hints as to How to Get the Best Results and How to Improve an Old One

Refrigerators are supposed to be necessary to the preservation of food, but many times, through carelessness, they are exactly the opposite.

A good (not necessarily an expensive) refrigerator is a profitable investment; but, unless one knows or studies it from all sides, in, out, up and down, we often find a refrigerator is a very expensive piece of furnishing.

The best arranged are those having the ice chamber one one side, with a swinging door. This space should be large enough to store at least 125 pounds of ice, and the ice chamber should not be opened.

Ice is wasted by constant contact with warm air from outside. There never should be any food kept in this ice space. The only things permissible are the water bottles, which should be filled and laid inside.

If you contemplate purchasing a new refrigerator do not overlook the fact that if the lining is white you can detect the slightest mold or any other dirt which might be neglected on a dark surface.

The ice chamber, if one is careful not to place any food in it, may be kept in perfect condition with a thorough cleansing once a week. Remove the ice and the bars to rest on. Do not use warm water. Take cool water, with any of the cleansing powders or a little ammonia, and wipe every inch and corner of the space, and flush the pipe with cold water. A little cold water will not flush the pipe; you need a flood or a deluge of water which acts like a torrent to sweep the drain pipe of anything it may contain.

All food should be kept covered. The little granite pails of different sizes that may be purchased for 10 cents are most valuable in the refrigerator. Milk bottles should be kept closed with a paper cap or a cup turned over the top of it.

Not enough thought or knowledge is given to the drainage or waste pipe. Many drain pipes connect directly with the sewer system of our homes. This is very unsafe. The only safe way to do this is to have a reliable plumber arrange the pipes so there may be no direct connection between the sewer and where food is kept.

The old wooden-lined ice boxes may be freshened and the musty smell removed by giving the entire inside a coat of lime. Wash the entire inside with a strong solution of soda water. Dry in the sun, if possible; if not, leave open until perfectly dry. Mix a quart of quicklime with water to a consistency of cream. Apply with a wide paint brush to every part of the lining. This will be satisfactory if used on the dark zinc lining. If the first coat does not make the inside white, give it another coat of the lime wash. If the refrigerator is in good condition, and the lining is of zinc and has become dark colored, give the entire inside two or three coats of bathtub enamel, allowing the different coats to thoroughly dry each time before applying a second or third coat. The cleanliness and drainage of our refrigerators may affect our whole household.

If the ice box is damp, a bowl containing a lump of unslaked lime (the size of an egg or a cup) placed on the top shelf will absorb much of the moisture.

Every housewife should inspect her refrigerator every day if she wishes to keep her food sweet, her grocery bills small and the health of her family good.

CAN YOU FALL EASILY?

Let Every Muscle Relax and You Will Break no Bones

"A special providence hovers over drunken men and children."

This saying is frequently heard, but perhaps the majority of persons never thought that it really had some foundation.

As a matter of fact, the main cause of bone breakage from falls is due to the resistance of the tendons more often than from the violence of the shock.

A child or an intoxicated person rarely ever makes any great effort to recover balance in case of slipping or toppling over. So no special resisting force is exercised, and the child or adult simply sinks into a heap without serious injury.

On the other hand, when an adult, with his faculties alive and working normally, falls, he attempts to save himself. He goes through all sorts of contortions and draws up every sinew and muscle until it is tense. Then if the wrench or shock caused by falling is too severe, the bone breaks.

Just a Link

Is this to thee a weary day,
A day that passeth slow;
A day that burdeneth thy heart
With some new weight of woe?

Be patient. Know thou that this day
Is in life's lengthening chain
A necessary link between Joys past and joys to come again.

Kitchen Comforts

Have a high stool in the kitchen, preferably one with revolving top. Sit down while preparing vegetables.

A snap clothespin has untold possibilities, if kept near the kitchen stove. It may be used to lift hot kettle lids, pull sauce pans from fire and will assist, without burned fingers, in turning pies and cakes in oven.

There are women in Norway who act as steamship captains.

Kansas has 375,000 women voters.

Constancy

The constant drop of water wears

The constant cooing lover carries off
And the constant advertiser is the one who gets the trade.

Hints on Beauty

Rest and Play in the Fields Revive Beauty

By Lucrezia Bori

Prima Donna of the Metropolitan Opera Company, New York.

LUCREZIA BORI

LISTEN when Nature calls you to come and play, and run away to the woods and live like the animals, eating simple food, sleeping under the star-studded sky, breathing life and vigor with each breath of fresh, pure air.

That is my message of vacation cheer to every woman—or man, either. It is not theoretical advice. It is a leaf from my Book of Experience. It is what I, my own self, do, whenever the singing season is over. Said a critic, on the last night of opera: "You sang as if inspired." "I was," said I; "freedom inspired me. Tomorrow I sing with the birds of the air."

Away I fly, the moment I am set free, to the Swiss lakes. There, in a simple peasant's dress I live out of doors. I run and row and make my mind and body a storehouse of health and happiness.

We cannot all go to the Swiss lakes, and it is well. There are so many beautiful places in the world, no one of earth's [illegible] should be neglected.

But, dear girls, when the vacation time comes, if you want to gain health and beauty and rest, do what you can't do the rest of the year.

Rest from Tango.

If you have tangoed all winter in close rooms, go and dance like a woodland sprite on the green grass. If you have travelled in close cars between home and office, run away where there are no cars and no offices.

[illegible]

That's a good summer motto. A trip to the fields and find beauty in fresh air and freedom, simple food and long sleep.

For many years I wondered at the [illegible] for May dew as a complexion beautifier. [illegible]

Setting Right Mistakes.

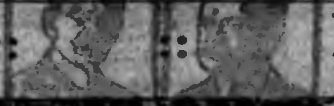
Says Ruskin, "All [illegible]."

Set your heart free this summer and enjoy life.

ASKING THE WAY

By Michelson



Copyright 1914 by [illegible]

NO young man in a car can be sure that he won't get lost, and no country girl who chances to be at a certain place at a certain time can be sure that such a young man won't ask her the way.

It makes a great difference HOW you ask the way, and it makes an equally great difference how you TELL.

The way of the world has been changed—the odor of the flowers, the odor of the fields, the look of the sky have all been changed—by just such happenings as this.

What's a road map between friends? Especially between new friends who have just found that they live in the same universe?

Will the young man's car find that same wrong road again? Will it become the RIGHT road? The CAR isn't saying a word!

Animal Superstitions

German children in the mountains of Silesia devoutly believe that beetles are both deaf and blind.

In India there is an idea that a lion cannot be induced to attack a prince or any scion of a Royal house.

In Wales it is believed that if any one kills a wren he will fall down and break a bone before the end of the year.

[illegible]

In England, Germany and Russia the country people generally believe that to meet a weasel is an extremely unlucky omen.

[illegible]

In Egypt the natives believe that crocodiles cry and moan like men [illegible] and make a prey of the unwary.

In parts of Austria and Italy there is a superstition that the human saliva is a cure for blindness. The idea probably originated in the miraculous healing of a blind man recorded in one of the gospels.

Youth and Age.

LEONA DALRYMPLE

DAD, I recall, was pretty busy that [illegible] and mother [illegible] with us [illegible] and there at [illegible] how snowy [illegible] hair was [illegible]

[illegible] greater beauty in my eyes than ever before. And yet, in view of certain happenings at our table that night I marvel [illegible] of youth.

And the "certain happenings" at our table that night were my pretty young wife's attitude toward age. Whether or not Mary meant purposely to be cruel, [illegible] I don't know. Certainly her [illegible].

For instance, there was some talk of an aunt of Mary's.

"How old is she, Mary?" asked mother.

"Dear me," said Mary, with much the air she might have used in speaking of a human century plant, "she's past 60. She used to be very pretty, but now she's getting wrinkles and gray hair." Mary shrugged, but I, boiled inwardly. It's the sort of thing I've often noticed younger women say in the presence of older ones, and I can never make out whether it is actuated by spite or vanity. I packed it away in my mind for future reference.

"Mary," I said hotly, after dad had called for mother and they had both gone home, "I think it's distinctly bad taste to make slighting references to age in the presence of a woman who is no longer young!"

Mary tossed her head airily.

"Your mother ought not to be ashamed of her age," she said defiantly.

"She isn't!" I said. "And she's growing old sanely. She isn't dyeing her hair and beginning to forget dates like your mother."

"Don't be coarse, Peter," said Mary. "And don't speak of my mother please in such an insulting tone."

"You practically insulted my mother at dinner," I flung back, "and it makes me furious every time I think of it."

[illegible]

"I've noticed," said I wrathfully, "that young women are [illegible] in their attitude toward older ones. Great Scott, Mary, don't you realize that you're going to have wrinkles and gray hair one of these days? [illegible] What do you call old, Mary?"

"Oh," said Mary, "thirty or so."

"My Lord!" I exclaimed, and glanced with some interest at this pretty wife of mine, foreseeing a change of ideas.

[illegible]

What a peculiar sense of personal immortality each individual has! [illegible] as if she had some special dispensation of Providence that would grant her alone immortal youth.

Mary broke in on my revery.

I smiled. What a lot of heartaches are ahead for Mary. She isn't as good a philosopher as mother is.

Useful Hints for the Housewife

By Ann Marie Lloyd

FIGS are not as well known in the average household as they deserve to be, for they are the most delicious and wholesome of fruits and may be served in a variety of ways.

Stewed figs used as a filling for thin bread and butter sandwiches are always welcomed by children, and cut in dainty forms make a palatable between-meals lunch.

STEAMED FIGS AND RICE.

Here is another delicious [illegible] dessert:

STEAMED FIG PUDDING.

Advice to Girls

By ANNIE LAURIE

Dear Annie Laurie:

I met a young man last summer, rather I had known him for a long time, but we began going together last summer. He always treated me nicely, and took me to entertainments, yet I believe I never fully appreciated it, for under the influence of some [illegible] girls, as I later found, I wrote him a letter asking him to quit calling. Now I realize what I have done, and that I do care very much for him, and good friends have told me he still cares for me.

What shall I do? I have no proof for his wanting to be with me only his looks, which are kind, and what my friends tell me. ANXIOUS.

WELL, poor little Anxious, you got yourself into a fine affair, didn't you, just by doing what some mischievous acquaintances were determined to make you do.

I'm afraid I shouldn't think very much of your affection if I were that young man.

What is the matter with you, anyway? Don't you know your own mind?

Couldn't you see that those girls were jealous because your sweetheart really did love you?

You foolish little girl you, to let any one make mischief between you and one who truly loves you.

What shall you do now that you have brought this trouble upon yourself? How can you ask such a question?

You have been foolish and weak and unkind. Why don't you write the man a note and tell him so.

You found it easy enough to write him the other letter which made him so miserable.

Write him a letter, little girl; write him a letter this moment; tell him the truth, the plain truth and nothing but the truth.

Tell him you are sorry and ashamed and heart-broken—and then wait for his answer.

From what you say I don't think it will be long in coming.

Annie Laurie

Secrets of Health and Happiness

Why a Kiss Is Dangerous; How to Cure Cracked Lips

By Dr. LEONARD KEENE HIRSHBERG

A. B., M. A., M. D. (Johns Hopkins)

[redacted]

YOU ne'er saw nectar on a lip, but where your own did hope to sip. Yet there are full many a pair of luscious lips that guard more venomous [illegible] and more germs than lurk in the mouth of a fly.

House flies, you know, have dirty lips, which enclose a wire-like tongue. This complicated tongue of the house fly looks like a wire brush [illegible]. Myriads of hollow wires go to form the tongue.

From this gyrating surface, the fly spreads its saliva over the sugar, bread, butter, milk and your other fodder. Flies cannot eat solid food, so nature has provided them with this mechanism to liquefy everything first with the germ-full saliva.

One fly spoils the pudding, and all your [illegible] dishes, even if you kill that fine fly an hour afterward. There are no ripe cherries on the most tempting fly lips. They all hide deadly poisons, which, like tuberculosis and cancer, may not materialize for a score of years. Human saliva, true enough, is a necessary aid to digestion. All saliva contains microbes, especially the [illegible] of pneumonia, bronchitis, blood poisoning, tonsillitis and others.

Perhaps each man and woman acquires a sort of immunity to the germs in his or her own saliva and thus escapes disease until exposed to some one else's saliva.

These ancient medical men called the [illegible] made a deep study of the human saliva. They describe a blue saliva in certain persons. This might have been due to blue pus or the blue pigment germ, bacillus pyocyaneus. Copper and other poisons might have done this also.

Dr. Marcellus Donatus describes a woman of [illegible] whose saliva was green, yet she remained always in good health. It turned out that she had been in the habit of biting her lead pencils. Accidentally a bit of indelible green lead lodged in a hollow tooth and the aniline dye kept staining her saliva for many months. The eminent Dr. Paget relates a similar instance.

Red saliva, violet saliva, yellow saliva, purple saliva, as well as brown and iridescent colors, have been reported. These have been traced to such germs as the bacillus violaceus, or violet-making pigment microbe. There is no actual ailment present, only the odd-looking saliva.

Often the very lips, fair as a spout to tumble pearls and diamonds out, contain a secret danger which only subsequent events may disclose.

Little red veins, swollen and like a blood blister, often appear upon the lips. An irritating saliva may cause this, or biting the lips may be responsible. Some astringent application, such as a styptic pencil or an alum [illegible] suffices to cure it.

Chapped lips and cracked lips, not to mention fever blisters upon the lips, may be traceable to [illegible] habits, to fevers, to infections of the thin flesh of the lips, to the rapid evaporation in the cold air of saliva from the lips.

Too much talking or silly grimacing which keeps the corners of the mouth puckered up, in contempt of others, often brings this just punishment.

The cracks and cravings are usually cured by glycerine and various other appropriate lotions. These heal as well as assuage the pain.

Who the Frog Was—By VERNON MERRY

ONCE upon a time there was a king who had three sons. Two of them were very handsome and witty, but the youngest did not talk much, and so was called Simple by all the people at his father's court.

At last, when the king grew old, he began to think that he had not chosen which of his sons would rule his kingdom when he died. He sent for them and said: "Whichever of you will bring me the finest carpet shall be king after my death."

At once they prepared to start out in the world in search of wonderful carpets, and, in order that there might be no dispute, each blew a feather into the air. One flew to the east, another to the west, but the one of the youngest son fell to the ground at his feet. They went the two brothers, laughing at Simple because he had to remain.

Feeling very sad, Simple sat down, but presently, looking around, he noticed a trap door in the ground near where his feather lay. He quickly lifted it up, and, to his surprise, saw a flight of stone steps, which he descended to a door.

When he knocked the door opened, and Simple saw a large frog seated in the centre of a room with lots of little frogs around her. She asked what he wanted.

"I have a great wish for the most beautiful carpet in the world," he said. The big frog called to the little ones:

"Little frogs, crooked legs, run everywhere, Bring me the large bag that hangs over there."

From this she gave the young man a wonderful carpet so fine that nothing on earth could equal it. He thanked her and hastened to his father.

Meanwhile, his brothers, believing that he would not get anything, had not gone to much trouble. Each of them appeared at court with a shepherd's plaid cloth for a carpet.

The king was very angry at them for their laziness, but was delighted with the gift of Simple. "My kingdom belongs to my youngest son," he announced.

Bright and early the next day Simple went to the trap door to thank the frog again for her kindness. She was glad to see him, but, when he asked what he could give her in return, she said:

"Would you marry me and make me your queen?"

"Yes," he answered; then added, "if you ever become human."

What was his surprise to see almost at once a beautiful princess standing before him. "The spell a witch put on me was broken the minute you said 'yes,'" she told him.

His father rejoiced again when he saw the beautiful princess, and there was a great feast at the castle when they were married. Even the brothers were happy and proud of their new wonderful queen.

The "Master's Cat"

CHARLES DICKENS was a lover of animals, and like all true lovers he was likely to become the slave of his pets. Williamina, a little white cat, was a favorite with the entire household, but showed an especial devotion to its master. She selected a corner of his study for her kittens, and brought them in from the kitchen one by one. Mr. Dickens had them taken away again, but Williamina only brought them quietly back. Again they were removed, but the third time of their return she did not leave them in the corner. Instead, she placed them at her master's feet, and taking her stand beside them, looked imploringly up at him. That settled the question. Thereafter the kittens belonged to the study, and they made themselves royally at home, clambering up the curtains, playing about the writing table, and scampering behind the bookshelves.

Most of the family were given away; only one remained, entirely deaf, and known, from her devotion to Dickens, as "the master's cat." This little creature followed him about like a dog, and sat beside him while he wrote.

One evening Dickens was reading by a small table whereon stood a lighted candle. As usual, the cat was at his elbow. Suddenly the light went out. Dickens was much interested in his book, and he proceeded to relight the candle, stroking the cat as he did so. Afterward he remembered that puss had looked at him somewhat reproachfully while she received the caress. It was only when the light again became dim that the reason of her melancholy suddenly dawned upon him. Turning quickly, he found her deliberately putting out the candle with her paw, and again she looked at him appealingly. She was lonesome; she wanted to be petted, and this was her device for gaining her end.

C. P. R. Steamships Last Word in Safety

Practically unsinkable are the two new Princess steamships which are now almost yards of Messrs. William Denny complete at the Dumbarten Brothers. The Princess Margaret, first of the new ships to be launched, is now ready for commission, and will shortly clear the Clyde for British Columbia. The new Princesses are fitted with double bottoms and are subdivided according to the very latest and best practices. There are no less than fourteen traverse bulkheads, and for a distance of 71 feet on each side there is a longitudinal bulkhead some 7 feet away from the outer skin. These traverse divisions are arranged to carry oil fuel. The general sub-division is such that in the case of a collision or damage, any two compartments may be thrown open to the sea and the vessel still remain afloat, though she may be loaded.

Primarily intended for passenger service, these vessels are not designed to carry a large amount of freight. They have cargo space for about 500 tons in the forehold and the 'tween decks. One of the attractive features of this new type of vessel being built for the C. P. R. is a marvellous observation room arranged forward.

C. P. R. [illegible]

When on the declaration of war the Canadian Government was asked by the Imperial Government to supervise the purchase and transport of commissariat supplies which Canada could provide for the expeditionary force in France, the Hon. Robert Rogers, Minister of Public Works, was the Minister selected to take charge of this responsible work. It was obvious to so practical a man as Mr. Rogers that the handling of such large orders as were in sight must be done by experienced transport officers, and, among others, he consulted Sir Thomas Shaughnessy, President of the Canadian Pacific Railway. Sir Thomas considered it a patriotic duty to place at Mr. Roger's disposal, without cost to the Canadian Government, the services of Mr. A. H. Harris, Special Traffic Representative of the C. P. R., together with such of the Company's staff as Mr. Harris might select for purposes of administration. As this staff eventually numbered twenty picked men, the value of the offer was considerable, and its acceptance by the Canadian Government had given the British War Office an efficient service and saved a large sum of money. Owing to Mr. Harris' initiative and untiring energy, aided by an efficient and loyal staff, a phenomenal tonnage has been moved to the seaboard and thence overseas to French ports of call.

The value of expert handling was demonstrated by the prompt chartering of vessels on a minimum charter rate, enabling the administration to maintain an average freight on oats during the past three months of 25 cents per hundred pounds, and $- -50 per gross ton on hay. Although owing to the scarcity of tonnage, freight rates have risen rapidly since September, five vessels have cleared from Montreal for a French port during the past ten days, the charter parties averaging 28 cents per hundred pounds on oats and $8.00 on hay, a saving of close on 50 per cent. on current commercial rates. In addition to this the C. P. R. has made no charge for use of its docks by the chartered vessels, and has warehoused everything free—being helped in this generous treatment by the Allan line, which also placed a portion of its sheds at the disposal of the Government. Over 600,000 sacks have been stored in and passed through C. P. R. sheds, and in addition vast quantities of oats were piled up in the upper sections of the C. P. R. dock warehouses, and subsequently loaded into chartered vessels consigned to French ports of call.

The Ontario, Manitoba, and Alberta Governments have received the same generous treatment in connection with the forwarding of their gifts.

The shipments handled by this administration, under Mr. Harris' supervision, September 1 to date, including flour, War Office supplies, and French army blankets, total the enormous figure of 120,000 tons of freight, free of storage, dockage or steamship demurrage charges. The rapidity with which supplies went forward was shown in a cable from England to "go slow," as they were arriving too fast to be handled. In fact, a record has been established which will take a long time to beat, and those concerned have come in for well-merited congratulation.

The season of St. Lawrence navigation having closed, War Office supplies will continue to be forwarded during the winter months via the Maritime Province ports, under Mr. Harris' supervision.

Estimates are then made to ascertain necessary widths of right of way required, plans of the final location are prepared and submitted to the Governor-in-Council for the Board of Railway Commissioners for Canada for approval. As this work progresses, examination of the surrounding country must be made for ballast pits, water supplies and other materials which may be required for the construction of the railway. Detailed surveys must be made also for local traffic facilities.

The line having been finally located and approved, the next item to be considered is the purchase of the right of way. If the line traverses an unsettled district, roads, often of considerable length must then be constructed, by which the necessary plant, materials and supplies to be used in the work can be transported to the line. In the construction of these roads it is very often necessary to go to considerable expense on account of the fact that to do heavy construction work a very heavy type of plant must be used.

Camps for the housing and sustenance of men and horses must be constructed and an efficient method of transportation for supplies established. The engineering work from this time forward consists of minor adjustments of the location, such as may appear economical; preparation of land plans and the staking out and measurement of the work to be done; the preparation of detailed bridge plans.

In timbered country the right of way, as a general practice, must be cleared for its entire width. The timber, where suitable, is used for fence posts, track ties, telegraph poles and trestles.

The equipment usually employed in grading consists of steam shovels that weigh from 30 to 90 tons, locomotives of various types, weighing from 20 to 140 tons; cars for the transportation of materials, such as the Ligerwood excavation of cuttings, construction of embankments, ranging in capacity from one-half to thirty yards; appliances for the unloading and spreading of materials, such as the Lidgerwood unloaders, car plows and spreaders. The small cuttings and embankments are usually constructed by grading machines, scrapers, wagons and cars. In addition to the above general equipment, in rock work steam and air drills, boilers, and compressors must be supplied.

In the construction of bridges, a plant consisting of concrete mixers, rock crushers, and derricks must be supplied. Where large gaps are to be crossed, for which insufficient material is at hand to fill, it is a customary practice to construct temporary trestles of timber, which permit of track laying to be carried on and which can later be filled by train haul materials transported often from considerable distances. This type of timber construction is also customary in the bridging of streams, where it is possible, in order to avoid delay to the general progress of the work. Steel bridges to replace these temporary structures can then be constructed after the line is in operation. Large bridges are very often the governing feature in the length of time required to construct a railroad, as where temporary types of construction are impracticable it becomes necessary to wait for the erection of steel work after the track reaches the structure in question, thus often causing very serious delays to the general progress.

As the grading and construction of culverts, bridges and trestles near completion, yards must be established at available points for track laying. Track materials are obtained and carefully piled in these yards in such a manner that they are available for quick delivery to track laying machines. Track laying of lines of any considerable length is generally done with a track laying machine, of which there are various types. These machines consist of derricks for handling rails, and trams which are adjusted to the side of flat cars and which have rollers in the bottom over which the ties and rails are moved from the material cars on the train to the front of the machine. With such a machine working to its capacity without interruption from two to three miles of track can be laid in a day. As the tracklaying progresses ballast must be obtained and placed under the ties, and the track raised to proper elevation, properly surfaced. Crushed rock is the best ballast and is used extensively on the Canadian Pacific.

Telegraph line construction must be kept up as closely as possible with tracklaying in order to facilitate the movement of trains. As soon as the tracklaying is sufficiently advanced to permit of the forwarding of materials, water tanks, station buildings, yards and terminal equipment are constructed.

Railway construction costs hundreds of thousands of dollars per mile. In many cases the rate per mile has been above a million dollars.

INTRODUCTION

The Glenaladale Silver Black Fox Company, Limited, was incorporated in 1913 with six pairs of foxes, at [illegible]. This Company re-capitalized in 1914, with 20 pairs of [illegible] Silver Black Foxes, at $15,000 per pair, making a total capitalization of $300,000.

THE FOXES

Six pairs (one year old) proven breeders, and fourteen pairs (1914 pups), making a total of 20 pairs—all young foxes—good for at least 20 years. This Company has bought some of this year's pups on farms with a guarantee that they are pedigreed and of the highest grade and very best quality P. E. Island [illegible] foxes.

THE RANCH

The ranch is situated on the well known Glenaladale Farm, owned by Major C. McKinnon, formerly the [illegible] of Sir William McDonald, and is only 12 miles from Charlottetown, in a quiet locality sufficiently removed from any disturbance.

THE RANCHER

Mr. Arthur W. McKinnon, our Ranch Manager, has had much experience in breeding foxes, and has the practical knowledge necessary to efficiently manage and care for the animals.

The foxes will be ranched free of charge to the Company for the first year. This means a large saving to the shareholders, as some companies have to pay as high as 25 per cent. of the income for ranching purposes.

The promoters of this Company [illegible] worth of stock for themselves. [illegible] worth has already been disposed of, leaving [illegible] to be offered to investors at $25.00 per share, with a guarantee that a dividend of 50 per cent. will be paid in cash in 1915, or whatever more it may be.

The Glenaladale Silver Black Fox Co., Limited, in 1913 guaranteed a dividend of 50 per cent. but [illegible] by to pay 50 per cent. in cash [illegible] 50 per cent. in stock in 1914. This Company is in good standing and to each and every investor the first of September, 1914, we can say:—"We have given you 50 per cent. [illegible] And we feel sure that in 1915 all the shareholders in this re-capitalized company will be able to say they received more than they were promised."

This Company can truthfully say that they have not one cent of watered stock in the Company. Now Mr. Investor, if you were a Company and you the shareholder, we would look to you for justice to give us all that was honestly due us. We would not like for you to buy 2 pairs of foxes at $15,000 per pair ($30,000) and form a fox company and capitalize your concern at [illegible] and make us pay [illegible] for it. The Glenaladale Silver Black Fox Company, Limited, will ask you to do nothing like that. We want to let you in on the ground floor.

NOTICE

When a fox company guarantees any specified dividend to its shareholders, and when said company is an incorporated body, you need not be afraid of any unfair play, for such company is compelled to pay what they promise, and, besides, every interest is taken for the welfare of both the investor and the company.

The promoters of this Company are all above board and will not permit any crook to come in and do anything that is not right. Anyone holding stock in this Company who is dissatisfied can, by notifying the Secretary-Treasurer, have his or her money promptly refunded.

FORTUNES IN FOXES

There is money in fox ranching more than anything else ever known. It is good for the rich man and good for the poor man. A poor man cannot buy a pair of Silver Black Foxes but he can easily raise $25.00, $50.00 or $100.00. By investing in this Company he gets back his money in at least two years and then he will have an income for life and for his children to come—and after them will be money in fox farming. One of the reasons for this is that P. E. Island has now 95 per cent. of the world's foxes in captivity. For every one pair that can be raised there are more than 25 wealthy people waiting for it in London, Russia, France and America.

PELT VALUES

The Fox Pelts have advanced greatly in price since 1910 and you can see for yourself what money was in them then.

Below are the particulars of sale of a consignment of Silver Fox Furs, shipped from Prince Edward Island auction to London, England, and sold there in March, 1914:

All cheques must be made payable to "The Glenaladale Silver Black Fox Co., Ltd."

A POINTER

Just to give you a little idea of what the fine ranching of foxes means to the investor, we will figure it out for you.

We have twenty pairs of foxes in the ranch and suppose each pair produces a litter of only four. Pups this is equal to 40 pairs and at $15,000 per pair it would figure out at $600,000. Now, if we had to pay even 15 per cent. of the income for ranching purposes (which is considerably lower than some companies pay) it would mean that we would have to pay $90,000 for ranching expenses.

We ranch the foxes free for the first year, so that in addition to a guaranteed dividend of 50 per cent., we save you this large outlay of money. While we guarantee 50 per cent., still should each pair in our ranch produce four pups it would mean that your dividend would be about 200 per cent. instead of 50 per cent.

FINAL WORD

A great deal has been written about Ranching, Grades of Foxes, etc., but after all the one thing that every investor should keep before him is the dividend he is going to get. We have tried to show you in plain English what we can do for you and now that you have our proposition, compare it with the offer made by any other company now in existence and judge for yourself. PRUSSIAN GUARDS NO MATCH FOR ENGLISH

Paris, Nov. 13.—Little by little, the [illegible] story of the heroism of the British troops around Ypres is beginning to come through, and when it is all known, its [illegible] will form one of the most glorious pages of England's military history.

The outstanding feature of the fighting between Nov. 10 and 13 was the defeat of the Prussian Guard by the British infantry.

At seven o'clock on the evening of the tenth the British general staff was at dinner when a despatch rider dashed up with a report from the colonel in charge of the outposts that the enemy was approaching along the road leading to Zonnebeke. Their forces were accompanied by artillery including two big field pieces.

The general upon receiving the news immediately gave the alarm and rushed troops to a point near Zonnebeke, where the road is cut by the railway from Roulers to Ypres. There he installed his guns and a wireless telegraph station. He then opened fire to which the enemy did not reply, and at the same time sent a call to Ypres for searchlights and aviators, which quickly arrived.

SURPRISE WAS CHECKED.

While the searchlights were thrown on the road the German army was seen advancing about two hundred metres from Zonnebeke, straight upon the British positions.

Blinded for a moment by the strong light the German advance stopped. They were astounded, as they had expected to take the town by surprise.

By the aid of the searchlights the British observers noticed that the German infantry consisted entirely of the Prussian Guard. Owing to their complete failure on previous occasions the Bavarians had been withdrawn from the battle line.

Then the battle commenced. Slow firing at first was followed by a furious fusillade. The Germans were firing in volleys. The first rank was lying on the ground, the second was kneeling, the other ranks standing. As soon as one man fell another automatically took his place.

The German ranks suddenly opened. Their machine guns were brought into play. The situation of our troops was critical.

Suddenly the order to charge with the bayonet was given. The colonel of one of the Midland regiments, putting himself at the head and waving his sword shouted, "Come on, boys, for the honor of England."

CHARGED MACHINE GUNS.

Into the open country, which absolutely no cover whatever to be seen, dashed the British infantrymen. As they ran toward the Prussian guards soon the machine gun fire early thinned their ranks, but eventually the German lines were reached. For more than half an hour the fight raged. Soldiers who had fallen to the ground slightly wounded, rose to their feet again and again, covered with mud and blood, and endeavored to continue the fight.

Observers on either side began to think the struggle would never end. Then slowly but surely the Prussian Guard began to give way. For a time they contested every foot of the ground as the British pressed upon them, but finally the most famous of the Kaiser's troops broke and ran.

Zonnebeke was held by the English. General French's "contemptible little army" had vanquished Germany's picked soldiers.

USED BAYONET AGAIN.

The fighting of Nov. 13 was another wonderful tribute to the resources and courage of our men. During the terrific fighting of the previous day a detachment of British infantry, numbering about eighty men, had become separated from their comrades, and was forced to hide in a wood between the two firing lines.

As night fell the officer in charge, addressing the men, said

"Boys, I don't think there is much chance of our getting out of this, but anyhow we can't do much tonight, so I think we had better go to sleep. In the morning, if the worst comes to the worst, we will sell our lives as dearly as possible.

THE KAISER LOSING HIS MARTIAL NERVE

Paris, Nov. 28.—The French war office gave out the official communication Saturday afternoon as follows:

"In Belgium the artillery exchanges were continued during the day of November 27th, without any particular incident. There was but one attack of infantry to the south of Ypres, which was repulsed by our troops. The heavy German artillery showed less activity.

"Towards the evening our artillery brought down a German biplane carrying three aviators, one of them was killed, and the other two were made prisoners.

"In the region of Arras and further to the south there has been no change. The day passed very quietly in the region of the Aisne. In Champagne our heavy artillery inflicted heavy losses on the artillery of the enemy.

"From the Argonne to the Vosges there is nothing to report."

"There is an undercurrent here on this snowy day, which is setting everybody on the tiptoes of expectation. Great news has not been made public but this morning's official despatches were so worded as to arouse high hopes. Rumor from trustworthy sources which is known at the Embassy, has been spreading throughout the city.

"The policy of the Russian headquarters has always been to underestimate their successes until they are able to announce them complete but to-day the modest statement, 'We have taken a number of prisoners' read in the light of the past, indicates that what has happened is that the Russian staff has outgeneraled the Germans, lured them into a trap, and then closed in upon them with an iron grip which cannot be resisted.

"The Kaiser's hysterical telegrams, alternately imploring and commanding his generals to save their country from invasion by hurling back the Russian armies, appear to have flurried and worried them so much that they did not stop to form plans, but advanced blindly and put their heads into the trap.

"They are in a noose which the Russians are waiting to pull tight. The haul of prisoners, already enormous, must be within a few days greater still.

"It seems impossible for the information available for the northern half of the German force to join up once more with the southern half, or for the capture of the best part of an army corps to be avoided."

GROWTH OF LANGUAGE

English Dictionary of 1616 Contained Only 5000 Words

Roughly speaking, the English language may be said to grow at the rate of 5,000 words a year. At least, that is the average growth by the measure of the dictionaries. Bullokar's "Compleat English Dictionary," in 1616, the year of Shakespeare's death, contained 5,000 words. Thomas Blount's "Glossographia" (1656) improved on this and soon superseded in its turn by Edward Phillips' "New World of English Words" (1658), a small folio containing 12,000 words; and by the time it reached its sixth edition (1706) the number had grown to 20,000, odd. Johnson's dictionary, published on April 15, 1755, though it improved all predecessors off the face of the earth by the perfection of its system and the soundness and breadth of its wording contained only 50,000 words, and it remained master of the field, even at this modest total, until Noah Webster's came along in 1828, and Worcester's "Comprehensive Pronouncing and Explanatory English Dictionary," in 1830, with 150,000 and 105,000 words respectively.

The latter part of the nineteenth century kept the ball rolling. The "Imperial Dictionary" contained 300,000 words, and Dr. Funk's "Standard Dictionary" (1894) entered the field with half as many again—318,000 words in all. There have been half a dozen editions of this, and the next new one will reach the high water mark with a total of 450,000 words, most of which are English beyond question.

Baseball in Prison

The American passion for baseball has been turned to good purpose at a Delaware prison. The warden decided to gratify the inmates' love of the sport as a reward for conduct. All prisoners who obey the rules and observe the discipline of the institution are permitted to play or witness the games. While armed guards patrol the top of the wall about the exercise-yard where the sports are held, they have not been called upon to quell any trouble.

Lifeboat Dwelling

A famous Cornish lifeboat, after years of service, has been converted into a dwelling, and is to let for $3 a week. This old lifeboat has done duty at many wrecks. It was launched when the ss. Mohegan went ashore on the Manacles with the loss of so many lives, and also at the stranding of the American liner Paris.

LENGTH OF SCHOOL HOURS

New Rule Adopted in Montreal Does Away With Home Work

What should be the "hours of labor" of the school pupil? A lively discussion of this question started among Montreal teachers and parents by a new rule inaugurated by the Catholic School Board. Formerly the pupils of the Catholic Schools of Montreal attended classes from 9 a.m. to noon and from 1 p.m. to 4 p.m., and were given a certain amount of work to prepare at home for the following day. The new schedule brings the pupils to their desks at 8.30 a.m. and keeps them at work until 5 p.m. with an hour for luncheon and two brief intervals for relaxation. These hours are for the pupils of the third and higher grades. The idea is that the pupils shall have no home work, but shall devote the extra hour in the afternoon to preparation of the next day's lessons. This sounds like a good arrangement in theory, but in practice it is found to have several faults. The teachers declare that in the higher grades one hour is not sufficient for the pupils to prepare their work for the next day's lessons, and, of course, under the new arrangement the pupils are not compelled to do any work at home. Therefore one hour's preparation is all they get. The parents complain that the new regulation increases the difficulty of looking after their children. Under the old-time schedule when the children were dismissed from school they were generally allowed the remainder of the afternoon for recreation. After supper they settled down to prepare their lessons. Now there are no lessons to be done after supper, and parents say that it is much harder to keep the youngsters off the streets at night.

HELPFUL HOME HINTS

Needles and pins will never rust in a cushion filled with coffee grounds. Rinse the grounds in cold water, spread on a sheet of paper to dry thoroughly, and then stuff the cushion.

If the sugar and water are too boiled for frosting grains, a teaspoonful of butter added will make it smooth and creamy again.

If you wish to prevent green vegetables from boiling over, drop a piece of dripping the size of a walnut into the centre of them, just as they commence to boil.

When making a steamed pudding put a piece of well greased paper over the top before tying the cloth. This will prevent the cloth from becoming greasy and they are no trouble to wash.

There is nothing better to remove tar from white clothing than lard. Rub it well into the spot and then wash it out with soap and warm water.

When you find fruit stains on tablecloth or napkins wet with a little camphor. If this is done before the cloth has been wet with water it will entirely disappear.

Keep the wax-coated boxes in which crackers are placed. They make excellent polishers for irons.

If grease is spilled on the kitchen floor, cover with layer of soda and cold water before scrubbing. The spot will be easily removed.

In scouring faucets great care should be taken not to force the scouring material into the joints, as the small particles eat away the screw threads in turning many times each day.

Impress upon the mind the sink waste pipe was installed for carrying off waste water—not vegetable peeling, bits of paper, burned matches or grease.

One or two asbestos mats should be in every kitchen to place under pans on the fire so as to prevent their contents cooking too fast.

If the oven bakes too rapidly on the bottom keep a sheet of asbestos size of oven. Place on bottom.

Embroidered Buds on Gown

There's a suggestion of fancy dress costume about this gown, of flowered taffeta. The blossoms are embroidered on the white silk in delicate green. The underskirt of chiffon is also embroidered in floral design, and the bodice is of transparent chiffon.

Tea Cakes

Cream one heaping tablespoon of butter with one cup of light brown sugar, beat in one egg, one cup of sour milk, into which stir one teaspoon of soda. One cup of raisins put into two cups of flour. Add milk and flour little at time, beat hard, put in patty pans. Put chocolate marshmallow on top and bake twenty-five minutes in moderate oven.

Codfish Toast

Shred one-half of salt fish and soak over night. In the morning drain thoroughly. Put two cups of rich milk in double boiler, blend two tablespoons of flour with a little cold milk until perfectly smooth. Add to the milk in double boiler. Allow to cook fifteen minutes.

MONEY IN WOODLOTS

Scientific Principles to be Followed In Securing Best Results

There is no part of the farm which will give bigger returns for so little expenditure of time and labor as the woodlot, says Mr. B. R. Morton, expert forester for the Dominion Forestry Branch, and there are three ways in which the farmer, by the exercise of ordinary common sense, can vastly improve the composition, production and reproduction of his woodlot.

The first thing necessary is to improve the character of the crop, which can be done by cutting down and using for firewood all diseased and deformed trees, as well as such species whose presence in the woodlot is not desirable. Only too frequently is the method of cutting exactly the reverse. The best trees are cut, often for purposes for which an inferior wood would serve. Firewood probably yields the best returns for a small acreage and for this purpose sugar maple, ash and elm should be encouraged, which should make an annual growth of from one-half to one cord per acre. Basswood, too, will be in increasing demand because of its rapid growth, because it coppices readily and because of its value in small sizes for the manufacture of excelsior, cooperage stock and other small articles for which the wood is particularly adapted. Maple reproduces readily, and although not a rapid grower, it nevertheless yields a substantial revenue when it becomes large enough to tap. Soft woods like spruce, balsam and pine grow much more rapidly than hardwoods and might be advantageously grown for fuel or pulpwood.

When the most suitable species have been selected and the weed-trees removed, the woodlot must then be thinned until the crowns of the best-formed remaining trees are seen to barely touch.

The third requisite in the scientific farming of the woodlot, is that the cattle be kept out, especially after heavy cutting, when reproduction is most desired. Cattle are just as injurious to a young crop of tree-seedlings as they are to a young crop of grain. They may indeed eat the grass in the woodlot, but they would just as soon, if not sooner, eat the young and tender hardwood shoots, and the same can be said of sheep. Even coniferous seedlings are not immune, so that certainty in production is only assured by fencing off the cut-over areas.

The Cost of Strikes

The latest available statistics show that during the past 12 years there were 1,319 labor strikes in Canada, involving 319,880 men. Nine million working days were thus lost at a loss to the country of $18,000,000 figured at an average wage of $2 per day.

SHREWD FINANCIER WAS THIS MANAGER

Hughie Jennings' Story of the Baseball Boomer Who Knew the Value of Publicity

In my career in minor and major leagues I have heard a million funny baseball stories, said Hughie Jennings, the famous manager of the Detroit Tigers, when asked to spin his best yarn. The funniest of all may read like fiction, but is fact. The man around whom the story hangs is now a prominent semi-professional manager in a large western city, and has a bank roll that is the envy of many a major leaguer.

This man received his start as a department store clerk. While working for a small salary, he learned that [illegible] the only [illegible] in town that was not [illegible] a [illegible]. The clerk was of [illegible]. He [illegible], and believed he was just the man to manage a team, backed by the store. And he helped the store [illegible].

He decided he would be a [illegible] press agent, so he never failed to tip off to the sporting editors any bit of news that came his way, especially about his club. He broke into the sport pages with the name of his firm so often that he [illegible] in salary.

All the [illegible] his home city only, but his club quickly made such a reputation that out-of-town teams [illegible] dates, [illegible]. [illegible] by [illegible] salary, and he decided to back a club of his own, [illegible] his brother as travelling manager.

If you wonder why this clerk succeeded as manager, [illegible] instance of his shrewdness. He wanted to get the results of out-of-town games, but hesitated about paying telegraph or telephone tolls, so he evolved a scheme to beat the companies. After each game his brother would telephone, asking for an imaginary person. Their code was simple, the initials representing the score.

If the call was for Mr. H. A. Smith, the clerk-manager knew his team had won by a score of 8 to 1, for the first initial meant his team and the second the opposing team, the letters of the alphabet being numbered.

He filled his grandstand one day by advertising on the sport pages a reward of $100 for a $400 diamond ring lost in the grandstand upon the occasion of the last game. Men who never attended the games invested in grandstand seats on the hope of finding that diamond ring, which, of course, never had been lost.

PUGILISTS' PARENTAL AFFECTION

By the recent death of the mother of Fred Welsh, champion light-weight boxer, another instance was recalled of the strong parental affection shown by so many prominent fighters. Amid all his triumphs, Welsh's first thought was always of his mother, to whom for years he remitted half his earnings in the ring.

Packey McFarland, one of Welsh's greatest rivals, is another exemplary son in this respect. Two years ago he wished to return to England for another bout with the Cardiff champion, but his mother, who was in ill-health, begged him not to go while she lived. And nothing could tempt Packey to break the promise he then made.

Jim Jeffries, after losing to Jack Johnson, begged that the news of his defeat might be kept from his mother. Johnson, himself, out of his championship winnings, bought his mother a house, and invested a sum of money to ensure her an income for life.

Jim Corbett, immediately after winning his historic fight with Sullivan, cleared the mortgage on his father's house, settled other of the old gentleman's liabilities, and [illegible] him to a long-desired trip to his native Ireland.

MEANING OF DREAMS SHOULD BE STUDIED

Most of Them Have a Meaning, English Writer Declares, and This Can be Discovered

Dreams cannot be dismissed with the scoff "What did you have for supper?" As a matter of fact you dream more when you are hungry than when you are surfeited, says a writer in "Answers." Other phrases like "loss of equilibrium," "brain excitement," "cerebral unrest," "sleep insanity," and so on, are merely attempts to explain why we dream. They don't touch the important question, "Do dreams mean anything?"

The writer's answer to this is, "Most certainly they do!"

Dreams can be divided into classes. A "return" dream is unimportant. It comes from the brain using up unexhausted impulses of thought.

Another type of dream is the "browsing" sort, which is a near relation of the "return" variety. The mind browses over ordinary matters of the day. Incidents are repeated, sometimes fantastically, but your recollection of the dream is, as a rule, vague.

That in itself is a good sign, for you need never worry over dreams you cannot remember. Those which leave a vivid and persistent impression are important and urgent.

Lucky and Unlucky Dreams

Symbolic dreams need a key for their unravelling. And there is this difficulty, that, except in some few cases, the key is entirely personal to the dreamer.

There is no hard and fast rule for interpretation. Thought [illegible]. A system of tabulation [illegible]. If you find that certain events follow a certain type of dream, then you have the beginning of the key. Certain objects which figure in dreams have, by thousands of years, been of good or ill omen, and these would help you out in details. Fleas, for example, foretell illness or death. Gold is a bad thing to dream about; fire, too, are [illegible]. Silver is good.

What are called "warning" dreams should be taken at their full value, and precautions should be taken to avoid the place, person, or circumstance indicated.

The writer [illegible] that a [illegible] in [illegible] dreamed and fell on him as he was on the way to a certain [illegible] where he went on a certain evening every week. He went another way, but the tree crashed down all the same. Like instances could be multiplied by the hundred.

Other "warning" dreams are [illegible] of what will actually happen, and cannot be "dodged." These nearly always refer to some other person.

Dreamt His Destiny

Old "Dream Books" have a [illegible] amount of rubbish, with here and there a little bit of true traditional interpretation. What has stood the test of thousands of years can be relied upon. Here is an example. A lad persistently dreamed of Satan and evil fiends. Tradition says that this portends the dreamer will become a priest. At the time nothing [illegible] more absolutely impossible. Now he is a clergyman of the Church of England.

Those who scoff at dream philosophy, and think that it is merely for the ignorant and superstitious, are wrong, the "Answers" man declares, for the most eminent men of all ages have believed in the significance of dreams. And as we know that nothing is purposeless in life, then dreams must have a purpose.

So, without seeking the aid of modern "witches," study your dreams, tabulate them, and get the key.

BODY AFFECTS MIND

Irritability is Caused by Sickness of More or Less Severe Character

The irritability of a dyspeptic is due to his physical condition. Most people, to a greater or less degree, realize the dependence of mental and emotional states on conditions of health and disease.

There is nothing truer than that the state of the physical organs, particularly those connected, directly or indirectly, with the digestive apparatus, determine the attitude of the mind towards things and people.

When a man's tissues are nourished he looks upon the world in a kindly way.

The man who can turn a thick steak and a platter of vegetables into mental and physical energy is the man whom we often see controlling other men and affairs.

The pessimistic, narrow, jaundiced creature is very likely to be lacking in the ability even to inspire himself to great things.

Planked Shad

Clean and split a shad, put the skin side down on an oak plank one inch thick, or lay in baking pan. Sprinkle with salt and pepper and dot with bits of butter.

(For a shad weighing three pounds use one-half teaspoon of salt, one saltspoon of pepper, and two tablespoons of butter).

If you use gas for cooking, place the shad under the broiler flame and cook fast for ten minutes, then lower the flame for eight minutes more. Shad may be baked in oven, allowing twenty-five to thirty minutes for a fish weighing three pounds.

Fry shad roe slowly in butter ten minutes, turning most of the time. Cut in slices and serve around the planked shad.

One of the new [illegible] of [illegible] in London proves to be that of canvassing for advertising. Twenty women follow this occupation.

Five women in the city of Philadelphia hold municipal positions.

AMATEUR PICTURES ENLARGED AT HOME

It is an easy matter to enlarge snapshots to a suitable size for framing, and it is not necessary to have a lot of fancy and costly apparatus to do it with. Almost any hand camera can be turned into an enlarging camera and fine results can be obtained.

The principal requisite is a room in which all light can be excluded and which has a window that will let in unobstructed light where you want it. A disused attic chamber or a storeroom will be fine. Even the cellar can be used if the cellar has a window that admits a lot of light. Cover the glass in the window sash with black paper and make it absolutely light tight, except for one place that is just the size of the camera box. If the window sash has four panes of glass it would be well to take out one pane for this purpose. Fit your camera tightly into the opening. If possible let this really be a hole in the window. You can then add to the light by equipping your camera back with are reflecting mirror.

Fit the back of your camera to the opening in the window and see that there are no leaks of light around it. The entire amount of light let into the room should come directly through the camera. Put the plate or film which you are to print in a plate holder or printing frame and attach it to the back of the camera so that the light will come through it and pass into the camera. Fix your plate or film with the image upside down.

Then place a table near to the window and put an easel or drawing board upon it so that the beam of light passing through the camera will fall on the board. Close the shutter of the camera. Pin a piece of bromide paper to the drawing board while the light is excluded from the room, and when all is fixed open the camera. The light passing through the plate and then the lens will print the image accurately on the bromide paper. The size of the enlargement depends on the distance the drawing board is from the lens. When you have your picture printed as you desire fix it in the way prescribed for bromide papers and your enlargement is finished.

Simple, isn't it? And yet it gives the finest sort of results.

BLUNDERS IN NOVELS

Women Writers Have Made Some Amusing Mistakes Writing of Sport

That popular novelists make all sorts of funny mistakes and perpetrate marvellous anachronisms when writing their tales is well known. Dickens, Scott, Thackeray, Reade, and so on, even Mrs. Florence Barclay, have all fallen into the trap. But in nothing are so many laughable blunders made by novelists as in relation to sport, and this is particularly the case with women writers.

"Ouida" was probably the most astounding of all great story writers of her sex in this respect. Speaking of one of her heroes who was taking part in a famous boat-race, "Ouida" makes this astonishing statement:

"All in the boat rowed steadily, but none rowed so fast as number six."

If "Ouida" has any blunder to surpass this amusing error in a sporting contest, it may be found in her description of a great horse-race, wherein her heroine is supposed to be the owner of the winner. And, this horse having won, the female novelist goes on to show the sensation made by the lady owner when "she came proudly into the paddock, leading the winner of the Waterloo Cup." The Waterloo Cup is the trophy awarded for the finest dogchase in the world.

Even Marie Corelli is not always accurate. Says she, in "The Treasure of Heaven," when her hero is speaking in that book:

"After school-hours I got an evening job, with a shilling a week, for bringing home eight Highland bull-heifers from pasture." Bull-heifers, indeed! What sort of creatures are they?

One of our living women novelists made her readers wonder, especially those of them who were swimmers or sailors. Indeed, the feat her hero achieved—according to her story—ought to be immortalized in letters of gold. The hero was supposed to have jumped headlong into a raging river to rescue the heroine and the following way is how he did it:

"With one hand he held her lovely head above the seething waters, and with the other he called loudly for help." Another feminine novelist makes her hero win the English Derby and astonish his friends by his prowess at partridge shooting two days later, regardless of the fact that the Derby is run early in June and partridge shooting does not begin 'til September.

The First Regatta

June 23 was the date of the first British regatta, held between Westminster Bridge and Ranelagh in 1775, to which Dr. Johnson appears to have taken Mrs. Thrale. It was suggested by Lady Montague's description of a [illegible] she had witnessed in Venice. The only rowing contest was "a race of [illegible]," after which a procession of boats manned by red, white, and blue oarsmen rowed from Westminster to Ranelagh, where various festivities followed in a Temple of Neptune. Some of the 200,000 who attended them, says the "Westminster Gazette," to have "[illegible] not wisely but too well," for on the return journey "many accidents occurred," and [illegible] persons were drowned.

COMBING WON'T RID HAIR OF DANDRUFF

The Easiest and Best Way is to Dissolve It

The only sure way to get rid of dandruff is to dissolve it, then you destroy it entirely. To do this, get about four ounces of ordinary liquid arvon; apply it at night when retiring; use enough to moisten the scalp and rub it in gently with the finger tips.

Do this tonight, and by morning most, if not all, of your dandruff will be gone, and three or four more applications will completely dissolve and entirely destroy every sign and trace of it, no matter how much dandruff you may have.

You will find, too, that all itching and digging of the scalp will stop at once, and your hair will be fluffy, lustrous, glossy, silky and soft, and look and feel a hundred times better.

If you want to preserve your hair, do by all means get rid of dandruff, for nothing destroys the hair more quickly. It not only starves the hair and makes it fall out, but it makes it stringy, straggly, dull, dry, brittle, and lifeless, and everyone notices it. You can get liquid arvon at any drug store. It is inexpensive and never fails to do the work.

LOCAL BREVITIES

Butter sold at 28 cents a pound in Lindsay.

The Ideal pool room was well (?) advertised yesterday in the police court. It was connected with an assault case and a drunk blacklister.

A meeting held at Lindsay for the purpose of organizing a Winter Fair in that town was a dismal fiasco.

Lindsay has formed a Choral Society with Mr. H.C. Hamilton as Conductor.

Mrs. Mills has received a letter from Salisbury Plains, Eng., from her husband Major Joe Mills. The genial writer said therein that he does not know when the Canadian Contingent will go on the firing line.

Lindsay's Charity Ball raised over $70.

Peterboro's Patriotic Fund now amounts to $7,[illegible]. A local capitalist worth possibly $[illegible], offers to contribute $[illegible] when the local contribution amounts to $[illegible].

Trustees of the Ottawa Separate Schools are appealing to the Privy Council over some little technicality of Ontario schools. Surely, at present the Privy Council has something more important to consider!

LOCAL COMMERCIAL TRAVELLERS KNOW HOW TO ENTERTAIN

Our Peterboro Commercial Travellers certainly do not do things "by halves." When they entertain, they entertain! and at that right royally! Few of the general public realize what the Commercial travellers accomplish. The general public does not seem to realize that any and all nations are dependent upon their respective volumes of trade. This city contains about a hundred of these Knights of a Nation's Commerce.

Well, on Saturday night, the local Commercial men held a progressive euchre party in their commodious rooms on Water Street. These rooms were first described in the Times. It suffices to add in this respect that the rooms are well adapted to comfort of the members, to playing an innocent game of billiards, to, in the card room holding games of "solitaire" "Old Maid," or other innocent card games.

On Saturday night the local "Knights of the grip" gave, in these rooms, a progressive euchre party that was attended by some sixty ladies and gentlemen. Soft strains of music enlivened the proceedings. "Love looked love to eyes that spoke again" (This is a quotation) Everyone knows that every Commercial man tells all he knows to his wife or his sweetheart We here digress.

In the progressive euchre, Mrs. J. M. Brooks won the first Lady's prize, and Mrs. Fred Brown the Lady's 'booby' prize. Mr. W.J. O'Brien, in the Gentleman's Class won first prize and Mr. Chris Graham, the 'booby' prize.

Yesterday a good friend of Chris, in a joking way said in regard to this latter prize "Chris runs one of the most strictly conducted hotels in Ontario, still he now runs a "blind tiger." The prize was a plaster paris tiger that looked like a cross between Forepaugh's menagerie and a feather duster.

Yesterday a local merchant remarked to the Times: "Why in —— don't the papers give the true war news? If the Germans were retreating daily, as said in the press, I have figured it out carefully that they must be somewhere in the Atlantic near New Foundland.

A Jew merchant here has his window filled with bills printed in a "Scab" shop in Toronto. About [illegible] Peterboro would bring [illegible] trade from this city.

Board of Education in Regular Session--Dr. Morrison Reports Splendid Work of Mothers' Clubs--School Children to Boost the Patriotic Relief Fund--Free Open Air Rinks to be Assisted

The Board of Education met in regular monthly session last evening, Chairman Dr. Morrison presiding. There were also present Messrs. John Crane, T.B. McGrath, Col. Miller, Dr. Burnham, V. Eastwood, W. H. Hill, J. Smith, J.J. Turner, jr..

The minutes of the preceding meeting were read and confirmed.

Mary I. Williams accepted appointment on the Collegiate Institute staff; Also two new teachers for the Public Schools submitted the acceptance of appointments.

Improved Light

Mr. H.R.H. Kenner, principal of the Collegiate Institute reported that it is necessary these days to use artificial light in the Institute during the latter part of the afternoon. At present 16 candle power lamps, 6 years old, are in use to disadvantage, and he suggested the installation of two dozen Tungsten lamps for future use. This matter went to the Property Committee with power to act.

Old Account Settled

An outstanding account of the Peterborough Light and Power Co's. for $900 odd, extending over several years, and accumulated owing to negligence in tendering accounts, was ordered to be paid.

Open Air Rinks.

On motion of Mr. Crane, the Property Committee was authorized to expend a reasonable amount on open air skating rinks.

To Report Absentees

Moved by W.H. Hill, seconded by J.H. Smith, "that the Principal of the Collegiate Institute and the Inspector of Public Schools be requested to furnish the Board with a report at the end of each month as to the number of occasions upon which any teacher has been absent from duty during the month, together with the cause of such absence." Carried.

To Loan Rifles.

On motion of Mr. Eastwood and Dr. Burnham, the Supervision Committee was authorized to loan the Civilian Rifle Association the use of the cadets' Ross rifles.

Good Work of Mothers' Clubs.

Chairman W. Morrison reported splendid work being accomplished by the Mothers' Clubs, which are composed of a number of ladies who meet in the schools on given dates, and make clothes for poor children, who without such assistance would be insufficiently clad to attend school. Dr. Morrison urged that these clubs [illegible] the encouragement and [illegible] the Board in the [illegible] are undertaking. This [illegible] heartily acquiesced in by all present.

In this connection Inspector Mowat reported that in the King Edward School chairs are badly needed for the accommodation of the members of the Mothers' Club who meet there. The Property Committee and the Inspector were authorized to purchase what chairs are needed.

Christmas Vacation.

The Board ruled that schools shall close for the Christmas vacation on Friday, December 18th, at four o'clock, and reopen on January 4th.

To Boost Relief Fund

On motion of Mr. Crane the school children will be allowed to parade the streets in the interests of the Patriotic Fund. The idea is that the children shall adopt and fittingly advertise some slogan in keeping with the commendable effort being put forth to raise in this city $50,000 for the Patriotic Relief Fund. It is confidently expected that the enthusiasm our younger generation is capable of will be contagious to their elders, who are in a position to demonstrate their enthusiasm in a financial way. Inspector Mowat will act with Mr. F.H. Dobbin, chairman of the Publicity Committee, in this matter.

Report of Committee on Appointments.

Gentlemen,—Your Committee beg to report and recommend as follows:

(1). That Miss Mary I. Williams, of Dunnville, be appointed on the Collegiate Institute Staff to succeed Miss Annie Weir, B.A., duties to commence 4 January, 1915, and salary to be according to Schedule.

(3) That Miss J.B.V. Runnings be transferred from the Queen Mary School to the Queen Alexandria school, to fill the vacancy caused by the resignation of Miss Hallett.

Respectfully submitted
W. H. HILL,
Chairman.

MANITOBA TO CLOSE THE BARS AT 7 O'CLOCK AT NIGHT

Winnipeg, Man., Dec. 1.—The announcement was made this morning by Sir Rodmond Roblin, of a new Provincial policy affecting the sale of liquor, in which the following are the main provisions:

A [illegible] will be called to pass an order-in-council to ensure the closing of all places where intoxicating liquor is retailed, at seven o'clock p.m., to prevent the sale of liquor in social clubs after that hour, and close all wholesale places at six p.m.

These measures are expected to be aided by license holders agreeing to close at the hours stipulated, in the absence of a law to that effect. At the next session of the Legislature, a bill will be introduced amending the License Act, to permit the Government-in-Council in times of stress or necessity to vary the hours during which the liquor may be sold and to give municipalities the right to regulate by popular vote, the number of licenses to be granted.

It is stated that these changes will be made immediately. Premier Roblin, in his statement, says that in the Province there has existed since the declaration of war, "a strong sentiment in favor of earlier closing of the bars than provided for in the present License Act., based at first, chiefly upon the ground that the occasion required upon the part of all classes of the people the exercise of more than the usual prudence and economy. Another reason," the Premier points out, "is furnished by the presence in Winnipeg since this place has been made a training point of a large number of citizen soldiery whom it is desirable to protect as far as possible and practicable from temptation."

Big Battle in Poland Not Yet Decided—Russians Still Advance

London, Dec. 1.—Russian and German official statements give every indication that the German lines in Poland are intact and that the forces are now locked in a terrific battle extending over what virtually amount to a front of one hundred miles.

There are three points of contact from the German positions south of Plock; through Lowicz and Lodz and south east of Cracow. The armies have gradually merged into one great force during the past week.

General Von Hindenberg's army, which was composed largely of conscripts of next year's line, has now been reinforced. With the Kaiser at the eastern front, it is believed a supreme effort is about to be made to hurl the Russian offensive back upon Warsaw. Every confidence is felt here that the Russians now hold the advantage, but it is realized that the conflict in the eastern theatre is far from a decision.

When a big battle is finally fought and the result and details are learned it is believed it will prove the most sanguinary conflict of the war. Its influence upon the entire situation will also be of the greatest importance.

Defeat in the East, it is believed, would be followed by the immediate retirement of the Germans to the second line of defences in Belgium. The Kaiser would then be completely on the defensive on both fronts.

The German attack in France and Belgium has now lost the greater part of its force and with fresh French and British troops constantly arriving, the time for the Allies to strike is believed to be rapidly approaching.

RUSSIANS ARE NOW SURROUNDING THE FORTIFIED CITY OF CRACOW

Lemberg, Galicia, via Petrograd and London, Dec. 1.— The energetic Russian advance is persistently pushing back the Austrians into Cracow. Information reaching Lemberg from a trustworthy source is to the effect that the Austrians are evacuating position after position, with very large losses.

It is stated that the Austrian line of retreat is strewn so thickly with the dead that the Russians have not time to bury them. The cold is so severe that the bodies are frozen.

German officers are in supreme command at Cracow. They are placing machine guns, light artillery, and wireless apparatus it is reported, on the cathedral and other historical edifices, drawing the fire of the Russians to these buildings.

Recent arrivals from Provinces of Galicia state that the inhabitants of all the regions evacuated by the Austrians are facing famine.

Frost-Bitten Germans.

Petrograd, via London, Dec. 1.—The condition of German prisoners captured in the region of Lodz is said to resemble that of the French troops during Napoleon's retreat from Moscow. Many of them have frozen hands and feet. They were wrapped in blankets and shawls taken from the peasants. One private wore a woman's fur wrap. The prisoners say that before their capture their courage was kept up by statements that the quartermaster was bringing warm clothes, which would be distributed in a few days.

The reported use by the Germans of monasteries, chapels, and other public buildings in captured towns as barracks, stables, and gun stations is explained by the prisoners as due to the reason that the private buildings had been mined.

On the Vistula River.

Reports from the front are that reinforcements sent for the army of Gen. Mackensen, near Lodz, are taking up positions along the Vistula river, where the German resistance seems to have been least effective. The apparent purpose of this move is to hinder the Russian enveloping movement until the main German column is extricated on the line which runs from Strykow through [illegible] to [illegible].

Semi-official reports from Galicia indicate that the Russian advance along the foothills of the Carpathian Mountains has reached a point due south of Cracow, thus surrounding the city from the north-east and south.

English Beauty Tells Complexion Secrets.

Through a fortunate meeting with an English lady, noted for her dazzling complexion, I recently learned the full meaning of that old adage, "Beauty is but skin deep." She taught me how to remove my muddy old skin, revealing the young and beautiful skin underneath. The process is so simple, harmless and inexpensive, I'm sure you'll be glad to know about it. Just get an ounce of ordinary mercolized wax, at any drug store, and apply nightly like cold cream, for a week or so. Every morning, in washing off the wax, tiny particles of worn-out cuticle come off, too. The action is so gentle and gradual, there's no discomfort. It's a wonderful treatment, as it not only peels off the faded or discolored skin, but all of its defects, as chaps, roughness, freckles, pimples, blotches.

I am indebted to the same lady for a remarkable wrinkle-removing formula. One ounce powdered saxolite is dissolved in a half-pint witch hazel. Used as a face bath, this is so effective that just one application causes the finer lines to disappear and soon even the deepest ones go.—"Elise" in American Home.

PURSE OF GOLD AND ADDRESS FOR REV. CONNERS

There was a large congregational meeting last night in the Park Street Baptist Church to bid farewell to the Rev. F.A. Conners who lately resigned his charge here. On the platform were the Rev. J.R. Webb, the Rev. A. F. McLaren of Gilmour Memorial Church, the Rev. R.G. Peever, and Mr. J.R. Burnham. Mr. W. Kemp occupied the chair. After the opening exercises of a hymn and prayer addresses were delivered by the clergy on behalf of the denominations and the Ministerial Association of the City, and by Mr. Burnham on behalf of the public. There was a universal testimony of regard and esteem of Rev. Mr. Conners and his wife, and sincere regret at their departure. At the close of the programme Mrs. Moore mounted the dais, together with Mr. and Mrs. Conners; and read a beautiful address full of fine and affectionate sentiment presenting them at the same time with a handsome purse of gold. After the pronouncement of the benediction by the Rev. Mr. Peever the audience went down stairs and enjoyed refreshments and a social time. The musical programme was of a high order of excellence. Rev. Mr. and Mrs. Conners bade farewell to the congregation personally and will leave the city in a few days. Some time ago the Board of Deacons resigned in sympathy with Rev. Mr. Conners.

It appears that in some remote period in the existence of the human family man succeeded in acquiring a taste for eggnogg and cauliflower.

GERMANS RETIRING EAST OF DIXMUDE TROOPS FIGHTING IN SNOW AT VERDUN

Many Regiments in Both Armies Have Been Supplied With Skins for Winter--Arras is Nothing But a Heap of Ruins--Amsterdam Reports Heavy Cannonading at Yser River and Canal

Geneva, Nov. 30.—During the last few days between Verdun and Belfort there have been serious encounters on the frontier with the soldiers fighting in several inches of snow. Numerous regiments on both sides have been supplied with skis for winter, but the Chasseurs Alpine, who are at home on skis, having climbed in peacetimes the Swiss and French Alps can easily outmanoeuvre the German Alpine regiments by their greater speed and knowledge of the snow laden forests.

Arras Now a Pile of Ruins.

London, Nov. 30.—H. Comme Hardy telegraphs to The Daily News from Paris:—

"News arriving from Arthur Leech from Arras today reports what must be the finally destructive bombardment of that unfortunate town. On Saturday fighting was resumed for the possession of a series of trenches. several German regiments hurling themselves upon the French positions. Both sides lost heavily, but both hung on with grim tenacity. As a result the French are still holding all of their positions, but Arras is nothing but a heap of ruins."

Germans Retiring

London, Dec. 1.—(Bulletin).—A despatch to the Central News from Dunkirk says the German front has begun a general retirement from the trenches east of Dixmude.

Violent Cannonading

Amsterdam, Holland, Dec. 1.— Violent cannonading has been recommenced along the Yser River and Canal, so violent that houses in the Dutch houses twenty miles away are shaken by the explosions. It is thought that German big guns recently brought up are now in action.

GEN. FRENCH REPORTS DANGER OVER BUT PLENTY OF HARD FIGHTING YET

New York, N.Y., Dec. 1.—A London cable to the Herald this morning says: "The danger is over, but there is plenty of hard fighting to be done." This is the message from Field Marshal Sir John French, which the British officers, who are home from the front on a few days' stay, brought to their families and friends. The officers are back for a glimpse of civilization, and society is alive and lionizing them.

The officers, almost without exception, say Lord Kitchener's strict censorship and no war-correspondent policy has saved thousands of lives, and they say the Russian method of announcing the news after it is all over, is the best model. This also explains, they believe, why so little is said of the victorious Russian operations in Poland.

BRITISH AND JAP. WAR SHIPS ARE REPORTED CLOSING IN ON GERMANS

Montevideo, Dec. 1.—British and Japanese warships are reported today to be closing in on the German squadron in South American waters. A big naval battle is expected at any time, and traffic in the South Atlantic has practically been abandoned.

The German squadron of Admiral Von Spee is now reported off the mouth of the River Plate. Ten British warships were reported off the Brazilian coast yesterday and are headed for the Germans, while the Japanese Pacific squadron is likewise following in the Germans' trail.

The British steamer Voltaire, bound for New York heard wireless messages being exchanged between German warships, and immediately put into port fearing capture. Officers of the Voltaire said the Germans were calling for their supply ship.

All vessels have been warned that travel will be hazardous until the hostile warships are out of the vicinity.

SHALL THE EAST CONQUER THE WEST

The lecture last evening in Knox Church by the Rev. Principal Sharrard of India, was a revelation to the audience.

India is no longer what it used to be 20 years ago, there were no manufacturers of steel goods, woollen goods cotton goods, leather goods, etc.

There are now hundreds of factories in India, which are supplying the whole market to such an extent that imports are falling off one half, and in some direction the Indies are exporting to other countries.

It is constantly expected that in a few years India will aspire to supply the world. With a population of three hundred and fifteen million, and if the other countries would only lower their tariffs India could supply the world.

Just One Application and the Hairs Vanish

(Modes of To-day)

A harmless, yet very effective treatment is here given for the quick removal of hairy growths: Mix enough powdered delatone and water to cover the undesirable hairs, apply paste and after 2 or 3 minutes remove, wash the skin, and the hairs have vanished. One application usually is sufficient, but to be certain of results buy the delatone in an original package.

CURE FOR SEASICKNESS

Important Discovery is Attributed to Dr. Fischer

Dr. Joseph Fischer, the well known heart specialist of Nauheim, in a Munich medical weekly claims to have discovered a method whereby ocean voyagers will lose their sorrows. According to his reports as the result of extensive experiments with sea sick passengers he found that an injection of atropin completely cured the worst cases. During a trip to New York Dr. Fischer made experiments on the way across the ocean to endeavor if possible to determine what sea sickness is and what causes it. He found that an injection of physostigmin produced the exact clinical symptoms of sea sickness, and that this was caused by an irritation of the vagus nerve. He then discovered that an injection of atropin paralyzed this artificial mal de mer. He immediately began experimenting with atropin in real sea sickness, with excellent results in the worst cases. Dr. Fischer says atropin is not dangerous and has [illegible]

JOCKEYS HORSES HATE

When Race Horses Go Mad at Post They Would Make Meal of Riders

Trouble in the paddock and at the post before a big race is frequently caused by a horse which has taken a sudden and violent dislike to his jockey, and there are numerous cases of well known jockeys being nearly chawed to death by their mounts.

One of the worst cases of "savaging" occurred to Otto Madden, the famous jockey, at Brighton races a few years ago. He was riding down to the starting post for the Worthing Plate, when a horse called Marigold IV. overtook him, dragged him out of the saddle by the shoulder, and, seizing him by the throat, shook him as a terrier shakes a rat.

The jockey of Marigold IV., who had himself been unseated, used his whip freely on the brute's head to make him release Madden, and other jockeys coming to his assistance, Marigold IV. was eventually beaten off, but not before Madden had been severely wounded.

Diamond Jubilee, the horse which won King Edward his first Derby, took a violent dislike to his jockey, Mornington Cannon. If Cannon ever went near his loose box, or the horse saw him in the saddling-yard or paddock, he would make frantic efforts to "go for him," and Cannon had several very close shaves from being badly mauled.

Fred Archer once had a bad tussle with a horse which tried to "savage" him, but the famous jockey succeeded in getting the better of the animal and won the race. The horse was Peter and the race was the Hunt Cup.

Peter threw Archer in the paddock before the race, and, seizing him by the arm, nearly bit it in two. Archer succeeded in beating him off, whereupon he threw himself down on the ground and screamed, lashing out at every one who came near him. Archer, however, was not to be daunted, and he eventually succeeded in mastering the brute.

Lord Charles Cunninghame, a well known sportsman who used to race on a large scale in India, had a very valuable racing pony which took a violent dislike to the "syces," or native grooms.

He absolutely refused to allow them to come into his stable, and on one occasion when two of the "syces" came in together to try to groom him he bit off one man's arm completely at the elbow, while the other only escaped with a badly lacerated ear. After that, white stable boys from England had to be specially imported to look after him.

Vedas, who became "savage" through ill-health some time before he died, wore a muzzle, and the stable boy was paid extra to look after him.

Ladas, Lord Rosebery's famous racehorse, was perfectly quiet under ordinary circumstances, but for some unknown reason he had a great dislike for ladies, and would "go for them" if any members of the fair sex approached his paddock.—Pearson's Weekly.

BUILDING CUP CHASERS

Some of the Rules Yacht Designers Must Bear in Mind

The conditions governing the America Cup yacht races give designers lots of latitude. According to the measurement rule, length is measured, but this length is taken in such a way as to limit overhangs and should the length be greater than the rule allows the excess is penalized. Draught is limited to 16 per cent. of the load water line plus 1.75 so that the limit of draught for a yacht 75 feet on the water line is 13.75 feet. Any excess is added to length. Then to find the rating after the length has been determined length is multiplied by the square foot of the sail area and this product is divided by the cube root of the displacement. The larger the displacement, consequently, the larger the sail area that can be carried and the designer decides just how big a yacht he wants to build, making its form as easy as possible and then figures out the driving power. It has been figured that the average defender measures about 100 feet over all, 14 feet draft, and spreads 7,400 square feet of canvas.

Steel Railroad Cars

Steel is rapidly displacing wood in the construction of railroad cars—not only in passenger cars where the safety of the passenger is an important consideration, but in freight cars as well. The entire end is made of a single piece of steel compressed with concentric annular corrugations, making a very strong and durable end wall. No posts, braces or rivets are required in this end piece.

AN ECCENTRIC PLAYER

Recruit Catcher Had Queer Ideas and Had Trouble With Trunk

Most ball players have peculiarities of one kind or another. But it remained for a player named Evans, a former Cub catcher recruit, to have a number of them. On a spring training trip several years ago he had the boys wondering what he would do next. Evans was a confirmed pipe smoker. It was seldom out of his mouth. When the other men would be rehearsing on the ball field Evans would be sitting on the bench pulling at his pipe. One day Frank Chance, becoming irritated, ordered him to get behind the plate during batting practice.

The recruit hastily donned his shinguards and chest-protector. Then, keeping his short black pipe between his teeth, he caught for nearly fifteen minutes, puffing away in a most contented manner.

At Vicksburg, Miss., one day some of the Cubs noticed Evans dig up a little dirt near the plate, place something carefully in the hole and cover it up with exceeding care. He repeated this trick at every stop. Finally they discovered it was a signet ring. He chose this method of protecting it against loss or injury.

He also carried an old trunk along on the trip, bearing a large sign. The motto was, "Handle with care." In this he had nearly five quarts of beef, iron and wine for the purpose of building up his system. He had nearly as much dope as Trainer Semmens had for the entire team. This concoction he took religiously three times a day.

One trip his trunk was badly mauled by the baggagemen and several of the bottles broken. It was exceedingly annoying, but Evans insisted on lugging the affair along until Secretary Charley Williams objected.

"The railroads absolutely refuse to accept that trunk," said Williams.

So Evans had to purchase another. On this he placed a new sign. It read, "Handle with care, you smashed my last one."

GOLF HAS MANY THRILLS

Making a Hole in One Stroke Enough to Make Any Player Excited

It has been said that golf is not lively or exciting; that it presents few opportunities for either individuals or outsiders to enthuse; that it is too quiet, etc. While there are those ardent devotees of driver and cleek willing to admit that their favorite diversion is not wildly exciting; that opportunities rarely occur for partisan crowds to display their feelings, it is also claimed that golf unquestionably has its thrills.

For those having once experienced the sensation of making a hole in 1 it is needless to attempt to describe the feeling of exhilaration experienced by the lucky player as he sees his ball disappear in the cup. Many holes have been made in a single stroke that have always been more or less doubtful. Players have played over rising ground to blind greens and after searching for a considerable length of time have at last found "a ball" in the hole. On such occasions there is always an element of uncertainty.

Furthermore, jokes have been played on unsuspecting golfers, probably the most cruel one being that at the expense of a [illegible] man and woman at a match several years ago. As a passerby stood near one of the greens of the course in question he noticed two balls, one after the other, land on the green in front of him. They had evidently come from the tee, which could not be seen from the green. Scarcely had the balls come to rest ere a couple of boys dashed from behind a clump of bushes, picked up the balls, dropped them in the hole, and scampered away as quickly as they had come. In a few moments the pair unsuspectingly came to the green and began looking for the balls. Finally the man casually beckoned his companion to see what he saw.

"Great Scott!" he shouted. "We have both holed out in one. Did you ever see anything like that?" Then they proceeded to rush to the club house to tell the wonderful tale, which undoubtedly they are still relating.

A Nautical Innovation

A novel feature of the Royal Holland Lloyd liner "Gelria" is the manner in which the name of the liner is displayed, either when passing stations or other ships or when lying in crowded harbors, says "Electricity."

The boat is fitted between the two funnels with an electric sign lantern 22 feet long by 5 feet deep, made of galvanized iron and bracing angles. The letters are fixed on both sides and are colored red on the port side and green on the starboard, with white enamelled lettering for use in the daytime. The lettering is illuminated by lamps aggregating 2,000 candle power.

Who Sails Your Boat? Success Lies with You

By Winifred Black

Copyright, 1914, by Newspaper Feature Service, Inc.

Winifred Black

THE water was very, very blue, and so was the sky.

The hills and the fields were very, very green, and at the edge of the water, along the line of green there was a little curling of white lacy foam.

And the wind blew over the rose garden, and it was all beautiful.

What was it that gleamed so white—so white against the sunlight?

A little speck far out on the blue water—a goldfinch sang in the vines—how red his head was when he looked out from among the leaves.

Was that an airship high, high in the clouds? A sea gull—do they know, I wonder, what neat, precisely winged pictures they make of themselves—those sailing gulls? There's the white again—clearer now—yes, it is a sailboat.

Such a little sailboat; how she rolls in the trough of the sea; but swiftly, swiftly, for she is sailing with the wind.

Why, she isn't so little, after all; quite a sizable affair now that she isn't so [redacted] is the line of her saucy body, and who [redacted] help liking the cut of that jib!

[redacted] it is to see a boat sail east and west—by the same wind.

Whoever is sailing that boat knows his business.

A blue-eyed Norsk, sailing so close to the wind that even the tiller shudders? A brown Italian from Capri, out to look to his brown nets?

How Simple It Looks.

Whoever he is, he's busy, in that wind. And yet how simple it all looks—from the shore.

It always does look simple and easy from shore.

Slip, slide, gleam, glance, the boat dances over the blue. Like a dream, like a whisper, like a vision, it comes—and is gone again.

But somebody has to work to make it sail.

Luck—what's luck but the wind that blows?

It will sail your ship—or drive it upon the rocks.

It all depends upon you, and whether you know how to trim your sails to the wind.

There never is a great success made anywhere, any time, anyhow, in any line of any human endeavor, but there was somebody behind that success pulling on a rope somewhere and setting sail at exactly the right angle.

Did you ever go into a smart cafe and wonder why it was so crowded, when one directly across the street was almost empty?

You never wondered, after you had had your dinner in the cafe that was not a success. Why is this little milliner putting money in the bank every Saturday night, and why is that one afraid to go home—and meet the landlady?

Do you care for clothes, smart ones?

Well, then, you must put your mind on them, or you'll never get them in the world.

That woman you know who is always so beautifully gowned—she pays for her clothes, pays for them in a coin you would not be willing to give. Pays for them by putting every nerve in her body and every thought in her mind into those clothes.

What Will You Pay?

What is it you want in this world? How hard do you want it?

Will you pay for it—yourself? Pay for it in the coin of your blood and your brain and your heart? You shall have it—in full measure pressed down and running over.

Sail on, sail on, sweet ship of gleaming white. It is a joy to see how [redacted] skim the blue and breaking sea. When you are anchored tonight in some [illegible] harbor the man who sailed you, he who kept you out of the breakers and off of the rocks, will light his pipe and lean back and rest—for he will be very tired.

He sailed the boat.

Who sails your boat? Some hireling—who does it just for the money you pay him? Some "friend" who tells you what to do and when to do it, to please him?

Or is that boat of yours sailed by the cruel master we call self-indulgence? Or does laziness sit at your helm?

Who's pulling at the sails of your boat right now—he's a poor-looking specimen—I'd throw him overboard, if I were you, and get at those ropes myself!

Oh—[redacted] easy from shore.

But you aren't ashore, you know—not yet.

You're afloat—who's sailing your boat?

ALL WHITE COSTUME LATEST FAD

Tunic and Coatee Remain in More Conservative Cut

NOW that the summer sun shines [redacted], the rainbow colors [redacted]ated the spring have faded before the conquering white. White from the wings of her tilted sailor to the tips of her tango ties, the summer girl of 1914 is the same adorable and alluring vision her sister has been since time immemorial.

The newest white gowns seem, in some miraculous way, to have escaped the freakishness which made many of the earlier gowns more grotesque than becoming, and have evolved a sanity of the features which the spring gowns presented in so glaring and sometimes so offensive a manner.

The tunic and the short coatee remain, for they are worthy a long life, but they are not exaggerated.

Paris has a new outbreak of black and white. Here in America we are using black piping on white hats, and reversing the combination, and we have our black cloth or satin frocks lined with white and set off with white collars.

For the woman who has many frock demands upon her in the summer there is a place for the all-white costume. It bridges the gap between the strictly tailored suit of white serge or taffeta and the filmy, flimsy wisp of organdie or muslin known as the lingerie frock.

Such a costume is shown in the illustration. It is intended for a yachting suit, but it will be found quite as desirable and useful for many other occasions on land, such as the races, the tennis meet, the shopping morning in town.

The material is ratine, which shows both an uneven check and a dot. The skirt follows the close lines of the season, and is slightly draped at the side. The tunic, shorter than many of its kind, has the short front line sloping downward at the sides. It is one which will prove becoming to all figures, whether they meet the ideal specifications or not.

Heavy, broad Russian lace edges the tunic, and narrower lace finishes the little coatee, which is loose and short, reaching only just to the hips. It also shows the upward front slope, and is fastened at the bust line with a crocheted button and two loops and ornaments.

The sleeves are three-quarter length and finished with cuffs of the lace, underneath which the long sleeves of the lingerie blouse are permitted to show. One edge of the lace has the points reversed, and is applied in the form of a shawl collar, while the softer collar of the blouse comes well above the coat.

The hat is one of the very popular white chip sailors, with direct front trimming of tall, white wings. White buckskin pumps with white buckle are worn.

Ratine and the cotton crepes are splendidly adapted for this kind of suit, and are being used by the most exclusive designers. They are easily cleaned, and give excellent service, besides having far more style than some of the fabrics, as, for example, linen, which they have displaced to a large degree. They have one distinct advantage over linen in that they are lusterless, and dampness or crumpling is alike to them.

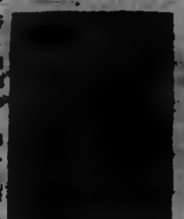
Danger Signals in Hands; What Cold Palms Mean

By Dr. LEONARD KEENE HIRSHBERG

A. B., M. A., M. D. (Johns Hopkins).



DR. [redacted]

YOU come into the world like brother and brother; then you go hand in hand, one beside another. Children go hand in hand to their play; lovers and their lasses hold hands in semi-solemn silence; aged couples cross away their closing lives, each clasping the other's palm.

Fingers are said to have been made before forks, and hands before knives, but no one alive today may honestly say that their hands were.

Human hands, like all vital tissues, are magnetic and electrified. That is to say, each squeeze of the fingers, [redacted] movement of the palm, each twist of your [redacted] electric sparks outward and inward.

If you doubt this, scrape your soles along a thick carpet and raise your hand to the nearest metal chandelier. A flash and a spark will leave your hand, leap across the chasm between and enter the chandelier.

The romance between pretty Phyllis and bold Rodney dies aborning, if either is so much modest as not to hold hands. If, however, the two lovelorn ones walk lovers' lane hand in hand, the magnetic currents flow from one to the other and the romance is crystallized.

Moreover, the tem[redacted]t of the individual not only is [redacted] in the hands, but is easily transmitted and thus becomes known to the other link in the clasped paws. Robert Browning, with true poetic instinct, phrased this in, "let my hand—this hand, be in your own—my own true friend! Hand in hand with you."

A hand white, delicate, dimpled, warm, languid and bland, is one worth holding only if you have an affection for the proud possessor.

The prevalent superstition, "cold hands and a warm heart," has as little and as much truth in it as most platitudes and proverbs. True enough, ill health and a poor, deficient circulation or flow of blood to the distant extremities, often cause cold hands and a feverish heart.

On the other hand, warm hands are often the rule in men and women with shallow, colorless dispositions. In contrast to this, cool, near-icy hands grip yours with a firmness that amazes and dumbfounds you.

They are, at times, associated with strong, virile, ardent temperaments that make for great happiness and deep feelings. Such as are thus equipped will never be found among those who, when they hold your hand, allow the flipper to lie loose in another's paw.

Moist, perspiring hands usually indicate a high strung, neurotic disposition due as much to an over-active thyroid as to excesses in food, drink, drugs and coffee.

Dry hands often mean a character shy, deliberate, wanting in initiation, or even deficient in internal tissue fluids.

The pains around the heart are due to disturbances in the stomach. Charcoal and oxide of magnesia should stop them. The headaches are possibly due to this together with constipation. Bran bread and petroleum should remove both of this.

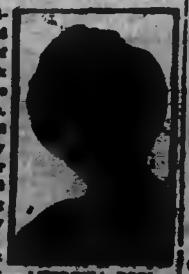
Care Is the Secret of a Lovely Neck

By LUCREZIA BORI

Prima Donna of the Metropolitan Opera Company, New York.

Special arrangements have been made with Senorita Lucrezia Bori, the famous prima donna soprano, who has created a wonderful impression in Europe and New York on account of her remarkable beauty and artistic attainments, to write for this paper a series of articles on beauty. There is probably no authority her equal in giving the newest and most approved methods of attaining and preserving "the divine right of woman."



LUCREZIA BORI

IF there is a yellow ring around your neck, or if the skin of the neck is dry and coarse and far from white, don't, please, call attention to it by wearing bands or any of the thousand and one alluring necklaces every woman longs for.

Make the neck worthy of the necklace before you assume it. Until the neck can face the world unafraid, wear a flare collar which partially conceals, or one of the thin, high-collared net guimpes, for necks are judged critically now that they are so fearlessly displayed.

Isn't it queer, when you think it over, that so many of us will patiently care for our faces, using hot baths, cold baths, tonics, lotions, creams, powder, [redacted] our necks so unkindly? And it is upon our necks that our faces [redacted] position in life.

How many times we see a lovely flower-like face, fresh as a spring blossom, pink and white and soft, poised upon a grimy, roughened neck.

Let's treat our necks as well as we do our faces for a month and see how gratefully they will respond to care and consideration.

Let's try to make them match the faces above them. Or, if it happens that some of us have fine necks and bad complexioned faces, let's reverse the order of treatment. Anyway, just let's try to see how well we can look.

First, scrub the neck with warm water and soap and [redacted] then rub with a bit of ice held in a piece of gauze. [illegible] cold water will be [illegible] good cleansing cream to remove every particle of dust.

At night, after the cleansing process, put cold cream or skin food into the pores with enough energy to set the blood in circulation. [illegible] from the way in which the skin will be absorbed.

Use always the upward stroke, with the start in the middle of [illegible]. This will brush away the [illegible]. When you retire, if there is [illegible] damp to facilitate [illegible] with a soft pad wet in alcohol.

I am going to give formulas for two simple creams. [illegible] the ingredients [illegible] this you will be able to tell which best suits your [illegible].

SIMPLE COLD CREAM.

Four ounces rose flower water.
One ounce white wax.
One ounce spermaceti.
One drachm tincture benzoin.

You can easily make it yourself. But the second cream I shall give you will have made at the druggist's unless you have plenty of idle time, for the glycerine should be kept at an even and gentle heat for 24 hours. It is a very whitening preparation.

Three ounces oil of sweet almonds.
Ten grammes oil of bitter almonds.
Two grammes of benzoin.
Two grammes of balsam of tolu.
Two drops of essence of lemon.

When you powder your face, powder your neck also, and don't leave any unpowdered spots under the ears and at the nape.

Sour milk is a good whitening agent. So is buttermilk. Lemon juice will speedily remove the stubborn yellow ring. Cucumbers are splendid bleachers.

But persistence is the secret of a lovely white neck. Care is demanded every day and every night. Spasmodic effort is not much good as a beautifier.

Three Minute Journeys

How They Fish on the Niger

By Temple Manning

FIVE miles wide at its mouth, the river Niger, which gives its name to the West African British Protectorate of Nigeria, empties into the sea at the town of Forcados. Mail steamers ply regularly to this port from Liverpool, but the up-country traveler, when he arrives at Forcados, has only made about a third of his journey.

For the first hundred miles up the Niger the river banks are thickly populated with all traders, but above, the dense jungle creeps down. The land is low lying, and the tropical foliage grows so dense that it is impossible to land except where trading stations exist, or where clearings have been made by the natives. For days the steamer that carried our little party slowly steamed through the narrow, tortuous channel in constant danger from snags, submerged trees and other obstructions.

It was upon the fourth day that we tied up at nightfall close to a tiny collection of native huts, and I saw, for the first time, the strange sight of natives fishing. There was one circular net of enormous size tied by ropes to a pole that extended back over the limb of a tree, and around this pole squatted half a dozen natives eagerly watching the water above the net. High above them, in the tree top, perched another native, who could look down into the swirling stream.

He watched the water with keen eyes, and the net hung only a few inches below the surface. Suddenly as fish swam over the net, he let out a wild shout. The men below flung themselves on the pole, pulling it down and lifting the net into the air. [illegible]

I noticed the peculiar care with which the men acted over the fish with [illegible] before they touched them. [illegible]

Mary's Luncheon.

LEONA DALRYMPLE

FOR days ahead Mary was planning her luncheon. There were to be 20 covers, she said. Every night she was tired. She made some little water-color gimcracks with impossible boats and lakes and castles on them. Mary can't paint, but her mother has made her think she can. While those 20 boats and lakes and castles were being built out of a box of water-color paints and a pad of paper, my meals were suffering.

I slid back into a diet of cold meat. Sometime I'm going to write a heartfelt essay on cold meat. I hate it. When I see cold meat awaiting my domestic butchery my heart sinks and it takes me half an hour or so to feel right with the world. And when we have cold meat we always have stewed tomatoes. Why? Simply because cold meat means that everything else must be done in a hurry, and the quickest vegetable under heaven is the sort you pour from a can and carry to the table five minutes later.

Cold meat always suggests stewed tomatoes to me—and stewed tomatoes always suggest chocolate eclairs. The triad constitutes what I term a five-minute meal. And when your wife's busy building water-color castles to impress her luncheon guests, she can't always take more than five minutes for you. If I could trace back 99 per cent. of my fits of temper and depression I know very well the fundamental cause would be—cold meat.

"Cold meat!" I exclaimed at last, goaded by the sight of the roast on the kitchen table. "My Lord, Mary, I hate it."

"But, Peter," she said, "I've simply got to use up the meat, haven't I?"

"Can't you buy a smaller roast?"

"Well," condemned Mary, "I could, but I buy a big one purposely so it will last over. I—I know I'd be busy this week—and——"

But I said nothing more. Why have another cold meat wrangle? Mary and I have had a great many as it is.

I wish I could remember the various fits of energy Mary had in preparing that luncheon and the reason for them all. I know that I found a little pad of expenses, and was so appalled at the price of 20 favors that I hadn't the nerve to speak about it. My emotion was entirely too strong to control. Twenty favors at 85 cents apiece! If I paid 85 cents apiece for cigars I'd be eternally ostracized, I am sure.

Mary had to have a woman to serve the lunch and a girl for the door. That, she explained, was absolutely necessary, for her mother had hinted that we might keep a maid in our new apartment. Just for that day it could seem as if we were, and then after that she could say that she had decided to dispense with her. How women pander to snobbishness. They even lie to impress their neighbors.

I simply kept off the subject of the luncheon as much as I could. If I criticized it, Mary would say I was a selfish brute and didn't want her to have a good time—or worse—that I was stingy. Therefore, I resolved to keep my peace until the luncheon was at an end, and then to have a definite understanding about economizing.

The luncheon day came and went. That night I found Mary so flushed and tired that I really felt sorry for her.

"You're tired out," I said.

"Yes," she admitted. "You see, Peter, there really is a great deal of preparation necessary for a luncheon for 20 girls. I'm just about all in. You don't mind eating supper by yourself, do you. I—I simply couldn't eat a thing."

[redacted] [illegible] she said, [illegible]

[illegible]

"Peter," she said gleefully, even while I was wondering, "the girls were simply green with jealousy." And to her woman's mind that amply repaid!

Advice to Girls

By ANNIE LAURIE

Dear Annie Laurie:

I have been going with a fellow, who is 22, for a year and a half.

When I first started to go with him he used to take me to the theatres, etc., about twice a week. Now he very seldom takes me out at all. When he calls for me he only stays about an hour and then goes away again.

There is another gentleman who wants me to go with him, but I don't know his character, so I thought I would ask your advice.

POLLY.

DEAR [redacted]: He's trying to get rid of you, can't you see that? I can, and I don't have to use an opera glass either. I'll tell you what to do. You get rid of him, honey, before he gets a chance to get rid of you, and then everything will be all right. By doing this you will be doing both himself and yourself the very greatest kindness in your power. He's in a rut, poor chap, and doesn't know how to get out. You help him, and some day you'll laugh about it all—together.

The Canadian Senate and Germany

Those who might be inclined to doubt the accuracy of the statement that the Liberal Senate, when, at Sir Wilfrid Laurier's dictation, it killed the Borden Naval Aid Bill, committed an act intensely pleasing to Germany, will not doubt any longer after reading the following extract taken from one of Germany's leading daily newspapers. It proves conclusively that Sir Wilfrid Laurier, in so directing his henchmen in the Senate, was doing the very thing which Germany hoped for. How far this act was responsible for the precipitation of the present terrible conflict will never be known, but it must be admitted it had some effect. The action of Laurier and his Senate was to Germany convincing evidence of the disintegration of the Empire. The psychological moment, in the opinion of Germany, had arrived when England might be attacked without fear of any assistance from her colonies.

Fortunately Germany was quite as much in error as Sir Wilfrid Laurier when he declared the independence of Canada was the aspiration of Canadians and that Canada would break the Imperial bonds "as a ripe apple falls from the parent tree."

The following extract is taken from the "Hamburger Nachrichten," of June 5th, 1913, one of the leading German daily papers :—

"The much discussed Navy Bill of the Canadian Prime Minister, Mr. Borden, demanding seven million pounds for the construction of three battle ships to be added to the British fleet was refused on Friday last by the Senate in Ottawa with fifty-one against twenty-seven votes, after it had been passed in the Canadian Parliament with a majority of thirty-three votes on May 16th. We still remember the long excited discussions that preceded the decision of the Commons, which prove at any rate that A VERY CONSIDERABLE PART OF THE CANADIAN PEOPLE DOES NOT WANT TO HAVE ANYTHING TO DO WITH SUCH A PRESENT.

"THE INTENTION OF THE CONSERVATIVES IS TO PRODUCE A CLOSER UNION BETWEEN THE GREAT COLONIES AND THE MOTHERLAND BY CREATING AN IMPERIAL FLEET. The Liberals, on the other hand, prefer a more independent development of the Colonies, allowing them to settle their own affairs themselves, and to be united with the Mother Country ONLY BY THE BONDS OF RELATIONSHIP AND COMMON INTERESTS. Therefore they want to build a special Canadian fleet, which will be at the disposal of the Mother Country ONLY WHEN THE GOVERNMENT EXPRESSLY DECIDES UPON DOING SO.

"Whatever may be decided upon later, the actual decision of the Canadian Senate means at any rate a heavy moral and material loss for the defence of the Empire. For Mr. Borden's promise had been, foolishly enough, counted on. HIS OFFER MADE AN ENORMOUS IMPRESSION IN THE WHOLE WORLD. Mr. Churchill pointed out this fact especially in the well-known memorandum of the Admiralty. THIS IMPRESSION WILL NOW NOT ONLY BE DESTROYED, BUT PEOPLE WILL EVERYWHERE OBTAIN THE CONVICTION THAT ENGLAND CANNOT DEPEND UPON MUCH HELP FROM HER COLONIES."

The writer in the "Nachrichten" then quotes, with undisguised approval, the opinion of the London Morning Post, which, commenting on the action of the Canadian Senate, said :—

"BY RIVALS AND ENEMIES THE DECISION WILL BE EAGERLY WELCOMED. BY FRIENDS IT WILL BE EAGERLY WELOMINOUS. The impression must be invariably created that the solidarity of the Empire is a myth, and that those powers which would like to see the overthrow of British naval supremacy need not be discouraged in their efforts by the thought that their challenge would be met by the united resources of the Mother Country and of every one of the Daughter States."

Upon reading the above there can no longer be any doubt but that THE AID WITHHELD FROM BRITAIN WAS SO MUCH AID GIVEN TO GERMANY.

Joint and Muscle Pains Banished by Nerviline

IT CURES RHEUMATISM.

Thousands of people, chuck full of the joy of living—happy, glad, bright people, that Nerviline has cured of their pains, all tell the same wonderful story of its power to drive out the aches and tortures of rheumatism and kindred ills.

"My goodness, but Nerviline is a miracle-worker," writes Mrs. Charlotte Chipman, mother of a well-known family residing at Mount Pleasant. "Last month I was so crippled up with sciatica and muscular rheumatism as to almost unable to do a bit of housework. My joints were so stiff and the muscles so frightfully sore that I even cried at times with the pain. For years we have used Nerviline in our family and I just got busy with this wonderful good old liniment. Lots of rubbing with Nerviline soon relieved my misery and I was in a real short time about my work as usual."

No matter where the ache is, no matter how distressing the pain you can rub it away with Nerviline. For forty years it has been curing lumbago, sciatica, back-ache, colds, chest trouble and all sorts of winter ills. Keep a large 50c. family size bottle handy and you'll be saved lots of trouble and have smaller doctor bills. Small trial size 25c. at dealers everywhere.

CANADA TO BUY FLYING MACHINES

Ottawa, Nov. 30.—A Canadian aviation corps is being organized at Salisbury Plains and will be attached to the Canadian army when it leaves for the front. Negotiations have been in progress between Canada and the British War Office for some time and it has now been decided to form a squadron of twelve aeroplanes. The squadron will be in command of Captain Janney, of Galt, Ontario, an experienced aviator. Capt. Janney flew from Massachusetts to Valcartier camp to join the first contingent.

There are two other Canadian aviators, M. Sharpe and Harry A. Farr, and for the remaining posts there are no less than 400 applicants among Canadian soldiers at Salisbury Plains who want to join the aviation camp. The British type of flying machine which has proved so successful along the fighting line in France and Belgium has been adopted and orders for the building of twelve have been placed, it is understood, by the Canadian Government in England. The Canadian airmen will likely train, according to news received at Ottawa, at Montrose, Scotland, which is one of the British aviation centres.

INTRODUCTION

The Glenaladale Silver Black Fox Company, Limited, was incorporated in 1913 with six pairs of foxes, at $90,000. This Company re-capitalized in 1914, with 20 pairs of beautiful Silver Black Foxes, at $15,000 per pair, making a total capitalization of $300,000.

THE FOXES

Six pairs (one year old) proven breeders, and fourteen pairs (1914 pups), making a total of 20 pairs—all young foxes—good for at least 10 years. This Company has bought some of this year's options on foxes with a guarantee that they are pedigreed and of the highest strain and very best quality P. E. Island fur-bearing foxes.

THE RANCH

The ranch is situated on the well known Glenaladale Farm, owned by Major C. McKinnon, formerly the homestead of Sir William Macdonald, and is only 12 miles from Charlottetown, in a quiet locality sufficiently removed from any disturbance.

THE RANCHER

Mr. Arthur W. McKinnon, our Ranch Manager, has had much experience in breeding foxes, and has the practical knowledge necessary to efficiently manage and care for the animals.

The foxes will be ranched free of charge to the Company for the first year. This means a large saving to the shareholders, as some companies have to pay as high as 25 per cent. of the increase for ranching purposes.

The promoters of this Company are retaining $90,000 worth of stock for themselves. $10,000 worth has already been disposed of, leaving $200,000 to be offered to investors at $25.00 per share, with a guarantee that a dividend of 50 per cent. will be paid in cash in 1915, or whatever more it may be.

The Glenaladale Silver Black Fox Co., Limited, in 1913 guaranteed a dividend of 50 per cent. but are going to pay 50 per cent. in cash and 50 per cent., in stock in 1914. The Company is in good standing and to each and every investor the first of September, 1914, we can say:—"We have given you 50 per cent. more than we promised." And we feel sure that in 1915 all the shareholders in this re-capitalized company will be able to say they received more than they were promised.

This Company can truthfully say that they have not one cent of watered stock in the Company. Now Mr. Investor, if you were a Company and we the shareholders, we would look to you for justice to give us all that was honestly due us. We would not like for you to buy 3 pairs of foxes at $15,000 per pair ($45,000) and form a fox company and capitalize your concern at $90,000 and make us pay, as shareholders, for it. The Glenaladale Silver Black Fox Company, Limited, will ask you to do nothing like that. We want to let you in on the ground floor.

NOTICE

When a fox company guarantees any specified dividend to its shareholders, and when said company is an incorporated body, you need not be afraid of any unfair play, for such company is compelled to pay what they promise, and, besides, every interest is taken for the welfare of both the investor and the company.

The promoters of this Company are all above board and will not permit any crook to come in and do anything that is not right. Anyone holding stock in this Company who is dissatisfied can, by notifying the Secretary-Treasurer, have his or her money promptly refunded.

FORTUNES IN FOXES

There is money in fox ranching more than anything else ever known. It is good for the rich man and good for the poor man. A poor man cannot buy a pair of Silver Black Foxes but he can easily raise $25.00, $50.00 or $100.00. By investing in this Company he gets back his money in at least two years and then he will have an income for life and for his children to come—and after them will be money in fox farming. One of the reasons for this is that P. E. Island has now 95 per cent. of the world's foxes in captivity. For every one pelt that can be raised there are more than 25 wealthy people waiting for it in London, Russia, France and America.

PELT VALUES

The Fox Pelts have advanced greatly in price since 1910 and you can see for yourself what money was in them then.

Below are the particulars of sale of a consignment of Silver Fox Furs, shipped from Prince Edward Island sold to London, England, and sold there in March, 1913:

SHARES

Shares are selling at $25.00 each. 25 per cent. with application and the balance on or before September 1st 1914.

Simply fill out the application form and mail to Major C. McKinnon, Secretary-Treasurer, Glenaladale, P. E. I.

All cheques must be made payable to "The Glenaladale Silver Black Fox Co., Ltd."

A POINTER

Just to give you a little idea of what the fine ranching of foxes means to the investor, we will figure it out for you.

We have twenty pairs of foxes in the ranch and suppose each pair produces a litter of only four foxes this is equal to 40 pairs and at $15,000 per pair it would figure out at $600,000. Now, if we had to pay even 15 per cent. of the increase for ranching purposes (which is considerably lower than some companies pay) it would mean that we would have to pay $90,000 for ranching expenses.

We ranch the foxes free for the first year, so that in addition to a guaranteed dividend of 50 per cent. we save you this large outlay of money. While we guarantee 50 per cent., still should each pair in our ranch produce four pups it would mean that your dividend would be about 200 per cent. instead of 50 per cent.

FINAL WORD

A great deal has been written about Ranches, Grades of Foxes, etc., but after all the one object that every investor should keep before him is the dividend he is going to get. We have tried to show you in plain English what we can do for you and now that you have our proposition, compare it with the offer made by any other company now in business and then judge for yourself, as have been told by some of the Charlottetown daily newspapers.

GERMANS SEND MERE BOYS TO THEIR DOOM

London, Nov. 30.—A despatch to the Exchange Telegraph Company from Amsterdam says:

Friday morning both German marines who recently arrived at Bruges marched toward the Yser. Some were singing; others were crying, as the Yser had a bad reputation. A high officer addressed the troops at Bruges Thursday and promised to take them to Calais.

Send Mere Boys to Doom

Great activity prevails around Ghent and Bruges, as large movements of troops are taking place in the direction of the Yser. Only small detachments remain at Ghent, Bruges, Eecloo, Thourout, St. Nicholas, Doynze and Thielt. The troops left Ghent on Friday night via Chaussee de Courtrai, in the direction of Ypres. On Thursday evening two trainloads of young soldiers, most of them being between 17 and 18 years old, arrived at the St. Pierre station at Ghent, passing the night in the station and in the Leopold barracks, and left for Ypres. German soldiers say that the Germans are going to make a supreme effort to cross the Yser. It seems they have concentrated a great numbers of troops there, and therefore the officer considers that they will have success.

Germans in Low Spirits

The troops who started for the front at Ypres were in low spirits. It is even said that at Bruges there was a mutiny among the German soldiers. The details are not forthcoming, but it is stated that some soldiers have been arrested and conveyed to Ghent. At any rate, on Wednesday evening I saw there about 100 German soldiers in boats guarded by soldiers with fixed bayonets. They passed the Rue de Courtrai in the direction of the St. Pierre railway station. In one of the Ghent hotels a German officer had committed suicide. The Germans are again moving up heavy guns at Zeebrugge. Twelve of these guns came from Aix la Chappelle. Numbers of troops, including field artillery, have passed through Cologne on the way to the Russian frontier. These troops were withdrawn from the battle front in France, where they had been for about two months.

THAT Oil authorities are agreed the Alberta Oil Field is of an anticlinal formation. It has been fairly accurately ascertained in what general direction these anticlines run. Geologist D. W. Nimrods Displeased

Hunters in the United States complain that the new federal law prohibiting the shooting of migratory fowl during the hours before sunrise and after sunset is marring the sport. Many protests are being made on the ground that it practically amounts to a closed season all the year for those whose only time for hunting is early in the morning or in the evening after work is over. The Government officials, however, argue that protection of the birds means, in the end, the conserving of the sport for the hunters.

WHY SOME WOMEN OPPOSE SUFFRAGE

Arguments Advanced by Journal Which Says They Would Only Add to Responsibilities

Women are often heard to remark that they cannot decide whether they are for or against woman suffrage until they have heard both sides, and that it is really only the suffrage arguments which they know. The whole case for anti-suffrage is stated in an editorial in the Boston anti-suffrage paper, the Remonstrance, which says:

"Thoughtful women realize that voting is less a privilege than a responsibility. To vote as good citizens ought to vote requires time and strength which the average woman can ill spare from her normal activities. She cannot take on man's job without slighting her own.

"Women are not in the habit of shirking. If they were convinced that their use of the ballot would be a benefit to the State, they would take up the new responsibility courageously. But this is precisely what has never been proved.

"When leading Suffragists admit that women will divide at the polls pretty much as men do, the argument that women ought to assume the suffrage for the good of society vanishes. The Suffragists are actually asking women to add the responsibility of the ballot to those they are already carrying, for no better reason than that a small but very noisy minority of women want it. The claims of the women of the home, the women of large philanthropic activities, are to be set aside, if the Suffragists have their way, at the demand of the woman of cross-country 'hikes,' of spectacular street parades and of soap-box oratory.

"Women [illegible] also because, so far from being a movement of 'progress,' it is a step backward toward the days when little or no discrimination was made in favor of women in the distribution of the burdens of society.

"It has been further well said that the farther we get from savagery, the more marked is the disposition among men to relieve women of the harder work and to shield them from the rougher experiences of life. The suffrage movement urges women to ignore all differences of function and powers, and to relinquish the privileges and exemptions which an advancing civilization has given them, in order that they may engage in a futile struggle for 'equality' in alien fields of politics and public life.

"Another reason why women oppose woman suffrage is that the moment they enter the field of politics they forfeit the unique influence which they possess by reason of their non-partisanship. Under present conditions, if women seek to better laws, they make their appeal to voters or legislators simply as individuals, with the good of society at heart, and with no personal or political interests to serve. But, when they are voters and members of a political party, their influence is limited to the party to which they belong."

THE CHILD'S HEALTH

Minor Ailments Should Always Receive Prompt Attention

The child, especially the child in school, is subject to all sorts of minor ailments—sore throat, coughs, enlarged tonsils, catarrhal conditions of the nose, throat and ears, etc. These are "minor ailments." Yes, but they may lead to all sorts of serious troubles if they are not properly attended, carefully treated and watchfully followed up.

Your boy has a cold. Are you trying to get his little frame into such an excellent condition that he can throw it off very soon, or are you letting it drag along?

Your girl has a touch of tonsilitis. Are you trying to find out the cause and remedy it so that it won't recur, or are you letting it go in the hope that it will cure itself?

Now's the time to do the preventive work. Now's the time to take the "minor ailments" in hand and stop them from becoming anything more serious.

Do you know that when children have any one of these various diseases of the mucous membrane lining the nose and throat they are much more susceptible to such diseases as measles, diphtheria, scarlet fever, smallpox, etc., as the germs which cause these diseases find here a favorable field in which to locate, multiply and develop?

If early attention is given to the small troubles of the child in the home and in the school:

The spread of infectious and contagious diseases will be minimized.

The number of grown persons whose strength has been hopelessly undermined by aggravated ailments of childhood will be happily decreased.

This matter is worth consideration.

Watch Yourself!

When you sit do you lean forward as though your waist were a joint?

Do you "flop down" in a soft sort of meaningless cramped heap when you stop to speak to a person on the street or when you slip into a chair to rest?

Do you walk with your shoulders back and your head in its proper place or do they droop miserably as if you had lost every vestige of energy and [illegible]

The muscles of the body are wonderfully pliable and most [illegible] to follow your bidding.

THE RIGHT WAY TO STRIKE A MATCH.

Once in a while we have complaints about our matches breaking in two. This is no fault of the Match, as EDDY'S MATCHES are made from specially selected straight-grained wood only. For the benefit of those who are still in ignorance of the proper way to hold a match (and there are many) we give the following rule:—

"The forefinger of the right hand should be placed "
" when the flame comes. This prevents any undue "

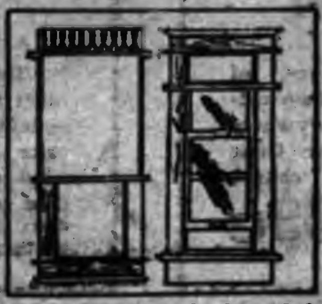
Noiseless Window Shades



Heavy winds send the window shades flying out into the room and keep up such a noise that a lot of people simply cannot sleep. Here's a way to stop the noise. Instead of attaching the shade fixtures to the window frame get a pair of blocks as deep as the distance from the outer part of your window frames to the top edge of the top sash. Fasten these to the top of the top sash and then attach your fixtures to them. Then when you lower your window from the top the shade will come down, too, and there will be nothing to blow.

Discovery of Rock Salt

An extensive bed of rock salt has been discovered on the Skeena River, about 45 miles from Prince Rupert. The product is absolutely pure and of the best quality.

THE STRAIGHT EDGE

One of the most difficult problems in practical mechanics is to make a straight edge. How difficult it is may be judged from an incident that occurred in the shop of a celebrated astronomical instrument maker.

A patron asked what would be the price of a perfect straight edge of steel thirty-six inches long.

"It cannot be made perfect," said the instrument maker, "but it could probably be made with a limit of error amounting to only a fraction of a wave length of light."

"How much would that cost?"

"About $40,000."

It turned out that the customer wanted the straight edge for a carpenter, and that an error of one sixty-fourth of an inch would not bother him.

THE ICEBERG DANGER

New Devices for Warning Ship of Approaching Danger

Since the terrible Titanic disaster, scientists and engineers have devised many [illegible] and ingenious [illegible] by which ships may detect the vicinity of icebergs. The old method consisted of lowering a thermometer into the water when the iceberg zone was being approached, the distance of the iceberg being deduced according to the temperature of the water in the vicinity.

[illegible] Dr. Copland of [illegible] who invented an apparatus which detects the presence of icebergs by giving readings of the saline contents of the water. The nearer an iceberg is to the ship the less is the amount of salt held in solution in the water. The Canadian Government assisted Dr. Copland in his investigations.

Another invention of which high hopes are entertained is [illegible] a very [illegible] of the water to be obtained than is possible with an ordinary thermometer. It is also self-recording.

The receiving apparatus is very simple, consisting of two [illegible] which are placed below the waterline on either side of the ship's bows and in contact with the skin of the ship. In each tank is the microphone, which is connected by an electric telephone system with the bridge. There the navigating officer has suitable receivers and switches which enable him to listen on either side of the ship. If he alters the course of the ship on hearing the bell so that the intensity of the sound is equal on both sides of the ship then the bell lies straight in front, and according to the intensity of the various sounds he is able to avoid danger.

SPLENDID SPORT IN FLYING BOATS

All the Thrills of the Automobile, Aeroplane and the Motorboat But Not Nearly So Much Danger

Year by year, almost day by day, flying is becoming to be regarded more as a sport than what was once called "the art." Although flying is yet in its infancy, it is not too soon to predict that the flying machine will become a strong competitor of the automobile and likewise, if not more so, the flying boat, to any other kind of sail pleasure craft. The landings from the aeroplane have not always been successful, but to alight with a flying boat after a flight is as easy as to guide a motor car to a standstill.

In the first recorded race of these craft, held on Long Island, the sight of three machines jockeying for position was inspiring, while the close finish of the return trip from the outer buoy would stir the blood of any sportsman.

Water flying is safe mainly because there is always a good place to alight. It is not necessary to guide the machine along a narrow course [illegible] starting or to pick [illegible] landing. The surface is [illegible] level, and one may land in any [illegible] with safety. [illegible]

The first development in water flying, the hydro-aeroplane, has [illegible] but the later flying boat with its large surplus of buoyancy has all the advantages of a motor boat and a flying machine combined. It is as seaworthy as any motor boat of its size, and flies as well as any aeroplane of equal proportions.

Now that we have a safe system of flying, the development of aviation is sure and unlimited. For [illegible] nothing can compare with the flying boat. There is the same [illegible] struggle for position as [illegible] and every opportunity for the pilot to exhibit his skill [illegible] [illegible]

On the water, the flying boat is [illegible] [illegible] operates the device for elevating.

TAX ON RACING BETS

German Government Proposes to Legalize Making of Books

The "bookmaker question" is one which has long agitated German sporting circles. For the last thirty years bookmaking, according to the strict letter of the law, has been "verboten," like so many things in the Fatherland. Yet the profession has contrived to run its business and prosper to a fair extent.

Now the whole position is about to be changed. The Government has been considering the matter, and a bill has been drafted which will have the effect of giving State recognition to the bookmaker.

In Germany, as in France, the pari-mutuel system is in vogue, and the Government taxes all the transactions of that machine to the extent of 16 2-3 per cent., and realizes about $7,000,000 annually therefrom.

Now it is proposed to reduce that tax to 12 per cent. Of that the State takes one-half, the other 6 per cent. going to the various Rennvereine, or racing associations, for the purpose of horse-breeding. The Government hopes that it will lose no revenue by the decrease, as the bookmaker tax will preserve, and very possibly increase, the amount the State receives. As to the bookmaker, the bill provides for the recognition of a certain number in each large town, the figure to be fixed according to the population. He must pay a tax of 6 per cent. of his takings to the Government, and the Rennvereine will receive a small percentage of the winnings from the person betting. Small wins will be free from tax, which will afterwards rise as high as 10 per cent.

SUPERSTITIOUS CRICKETERS

Why cricketers should be superstitious is hard to say, but that the majority of them are very much so is a well known fact. Probably the most common belief in the cricketer's creed of superstition is that a bat which has made a good score can, if given a fair chance, repeat the performance. Hundreds of cricketers would give very large sums to possess themselves of a bat with which some famous batsman has knocked up a big score, and high prices have been offered for the bats of the leading cracks by amateurs who believed in the superstition.

[illegible] a batsman who [illegible] he is unable to score with [illegible] a big score. Another popular belief is that if a batsman [illegible] the bowler [illegible] [illegible] his way to the pavilion.

ROAD MAINTENANCE

Various Suggestions as to Distributing the Cost of Good Roads

With the appointment of the three highway commissioners by the Ontario Government come various opinions and recommendations regarding the good roads movement throughout the province. In the hope of getting suggestions the secretary of Ontario good roads communicated with the reeves of various townships scattered about the province, and the result was a decided tendency to ask more money from the government. The most common recommendation is that the government pay one-half the cost of good roads construction, instead of one-third, as provided under the Highways Act. A second common demand is that motorists be compelled to pay more towards the roads they help to destroy. Complaints are made that motors wear roads out faster than the townships can afford to keep them repaired, and that it is the motor and not the horse vehicle which does the bulk of the damage. This seems to be particularly the case in townships lying close to the larger cities. Force motors to pay a high tax, proportionate to weight of the car, is the suggestion. From one county comes the recommendation that the roads leading from large centers of population bear the full cost, and hold this out as an inducement in the more remote districts. Some districts are not inclined to favor the movement entirely, stating that more progress will have to be made at less cost, or the system will rapidly become unpopular among the people who are now paying the bills. The government, however, might absorb a good share of that cost. The suggestion of a frontage tax comes from another county. It is a recognized thing that improved roads increase the value of adjoining farms and the recommendation is that these farmers help pay for the roads in larger percentage than those whose farms are benefitted less.

INDIAN HEAD BARN

On the Experimental Farm at Indian Head there is a wonderful barn. Cement work was very largely used in the construction of both the stable—which was completed last autumn—and barn, as both have a 10 foot wall of cement. This material was also used in the floor and stalls of the horse stable and of the basement of the barn, which will be used for the winter feeding of cattle.

The horse stable, which is a huge affair, is splendidly fitted up in every way, while the barn is the last cry in barn-structure. Its dimensions are 66 feet by 116 feet with an elevation of 58 feet. This height gives the building an added appearance of immensity, especially from inside, but there are no posts; the barn is framed with eight large bents, with hip roof.

A goodly space on the ground floor is reserved for work shop, and granaries have also a generous allowance; the windows are hung on weights, and can be easily lowered, indeed, taking it all in all, the barn is so very fine a structure that the fire which destroyed the old buildings may now be regarded as more of a blessing than a curse.

HARVEST OF THE SEA

The halibut of British Columbia have an enviable reputation, for they are less overgrown and of finer texture than the Icelandic and North Sea fish; a length of five to six feet and weight of 250 pounds is exceptional for the British Columbia halibut. The waters between Queen Charlotte Islands and the mainland, especially off Rose Spit, and off the west shore of Banks Island, were at one time veritably overcrowded with halibut.

Very large fish were often taken then, some weighing 150 pounds, but the general weight now is only from 20 to 60 pounds. The halibut are scattered all over the strait, but regular migrations have been noticed, and where the waters of these entrances meet the currents, moving from the south through Hecate Strait, and food appears abundant, the fish congregate in large numbers.

The superabundance of herrings on the coast of British Columbia has been recognized from early times, but, as the local demand was insignificant, no herring fishery can be said to have existed, until about thirty years ago. At intervals, and in a desultory way, various parties engaged in the herring industry, and quantities were converted into oil and guano. Within the last ten years, however, the value of this fishery resource has been realized.

Herring occur all along the coast as far as Alaska, though in sheltered areas, like the waters near Nanaimo, Ucluelet, Barkley Sound, Virago Sound and Queen Charlotte Islands, the schools appear to form solid phalanxes.

Protecting the Guests

To insure hotels and restaurants serving their patrons fresh eggs, a candling apparatus using an electric light has been invented.

HEARING IS RESTORED TO DEAF

Thousands of people suffer from catarrhal deafness or poor hearing, who having tried specialists, advertised treatments, artificial ear drums, ear phones, electric vibrators and various mechanical appliances without success have at last resigned themselves to a "world of silence" thinking that nothing can ever restore to them their normal hearing. Yet their case is not hopeless. A remarkable scientific treatment discovered a little more than a year ago in England is making people hear after years of deafness and is also unequalled for quickly stopping the distressing head noises that are so often the companions of defective hearing. This discovery is called Parmint and has attracted widespread notice throughout Europe where reports of the remarkable results it has given to deaf people have come in by the hundred.

The effect of Parmint it seems is by tonic action to produce a stimulus necessary to reduce all inflammation, swelling, enlargement or thickening of the organs of hearing and to stimulate the entire auditory tract.

Parmint is now being sold by many leading druggists in Peterborough and vicinity and a speedy trial is urged upon all who suffer from catarrhal deafness or headnoises in any degree. Ask the druggist for 1 oz. of Parmint (Double Strength) and take it home and mix with ¼ pint of hot water and 4 oz. of granulated sugar until dissolved. Take one tablespoonful four times a day and you should soon find a remarkable improvement in your hearing.

IMPORTANT.—In ordering Parmint always specify that you want Double Strength; your druggist has it or he can get it for you. If not, send 75c to the International Laboratories, 74 St. Antoine St., Montreal, who make a specialty of it.

LOCAL BREVITIES

Yesterday Mr. Ted Cavanagh shipped twelve men to Nogie's Creek to cut wood for the Stoer's Camp.

Yesterday instead of the sign that might be hung out at the police station "Standing Room Only" there might have been a sign reading "N. D." (nothing doing.)

The total sale of short term local debentures up to the month ending Nov. 30th amounted to $[illegible]. One hundred and fifty thousand dollars' worth have been offered for sale.

Messrs. Dupuis and Pignolle of Lindsay had a horse killed by an automobile on Kent street. The supposition is that either the chauffeur or the horse had eyes strained by trying to see across this thoroughfare.

Lindsay would seem to be a healthy town to live in. There is only one mild attack of diphtheria there. Also for lack of excitement very few cases of heart trouble are known.

Mr. C. L. Howe, manager of the Public Utilities has tendered his resignation to the Public Utilities Commission. The commissioners have appointed Mr. H.O. Fisher of this city to succeed Mr. Howe.

London's Beauty Writers

By [illegible], Special Correspondent, London, Eng.

Each week in this department I will endeavor, by careful clipping from the London papers, to keep my Colonial readers informed on the latest and best advice of the London beauty experts. Owing to the persistent demand most London newspapers and periodicals are now devoting much space to the serious consideration of beauty culture. Many of them only [illegible] selected experts to advise and instruct in methods most effective for [illegible] or restoring beauty of face and figure. I append herewith a few clippings from [illegible] publications. Any of the ingredients mentioned could be obtained from Canadian chemists or druggists, so I am told. Look out for more hints next week. I shall endeavor to keep right up to date.

Don't Curl Hair With Hot Irons

Instead of burning the life out of your hair with a heated curling iron, you can add to its life by using plain liquid silmerine, and at the same time obtain a far better and more lasting result. Your hair will have a delightful wavy appearance no matter in what form it is done up, if you will simply apply a little silmerine at night with a clean tooth-brush, drawing this through the hair from root to tip. As you will not need to repeat the application for a fortnight—or possibly a week if the weather be unusually damp—the original bottle the druggist supplies will last you a long time.

About Hair Washing.

[illegible] effect desired by many ladies. A teaspoonful of the stallax granules, dissolved in a cup of hot water, is ample for a luxurious head wash, and leaves the hair with a peculiar lustre and fluffiness obtainable from nothing else as far as known. It is perfectly harmless and can be obtained from most druggists, although since it has been but little used for this purpose it comes only in sealed original packages, enough to make up twenty or thirty original shampoos.

Better Than Face Powder.

Instead of face powder I always use a simple home-made lotion which I find more useful than the former for any of its purposes, with none of its objections. The lotion, which is made by dissolving one ounce of ordinary cleminite in four tablespoonfuls of water, acts as a sort of armour against winds, dust, smoke and other extraneous matter, besides being excellent for oily or shiny skin. Unlike powder it does not show, does not easily come off without washing, and does not interfere with the healthy action of the pores.

To Remove Superfluous Hair.

It is a simple matter to remove a downy growth of hair temporarily, but to remove completely, without injury to the skin, even a heavy moustache, is quite another matter. It is a pity it is not more generally known that powdered pheminol may be successfully used for this purpose. Apply it directly to the hair. The recommended treatment is designed not merely to instantly remove hair, but also to gradually kill the roots [illegible]

FOES TRENCHES PROTECTED BY BARBED WIRE

Petrograd, Nov. 30.—Six hundred prisoners, seven guns and many wounded fell into Russian hands in yesterday's fighting to the west of Lowicz, where the Russians took ten miles of German trenches between Glovno and Sobota, according to information received to-day through trust-worthy sources.

Glovno is sixteen miles northeast of Lodz and Sobota is twelve miles to the north of Glovno. The trenches were protected by triple earthworks and wire entanglements.

Kaiser Sends Help.

It is semi-officially announced that the Germans have received reinforcements in the shape of [illegible] infantry divisions and one cavalry division.

Germans in Tight Corner.

Military experts are of the opinion that the German position around Lodz today is far more critical than it was during the initial reverses around Warsaw a month ago.

They point out that the German army is 20 miles from Thorn, its base and the fact that the occupation of its present position was so precipitate indicates that the line of retreat was not well organized.

The Enemy Handicapped

Military observers also maintain that the Germans will be greatly handicapped by the withdrawal even, should they execute the movement in fairly good order.

The extent of the Russian advance in East Prussia between the Masur Lakes and the River Angerapp is officially stated to be one day's march.

GERMANS SEEM TO HAVE EXTRICATED THEMSELVES FROM RUSSIAN TRAP

Cut Through Enveloping Opponents, But at a Terrible Sacrifice of Life and War Mat rial--Bloodiest of Hand-to-Hand Fighting in Poland--Russians Control the Vistula, an Important Line of Communication for the Germans

Petrograd, Dec. 2.—It is now admitted that in the vicinity of Lodz and Lowicz, the Germans have succeeded in cutting their way out of the trap which had been laid for them. This was accomplished however with terrible losses.

Bayonets and Fists.

The bloodiest battle of the fighting in Poland to date is said to have been last Friday. Throughout that day the Siberian corps stormed the German trenches in the Lodz region. The Russians charged and carried the fighting directly to the German lines. The enemy offered terrific resistance. Ammunition was cast aside and the two forces fought bayonet to bayonet or clubbed each other with the butts of their rifles. Many resorted to bare fists before giving up. Not a single German was left alive when the Russians finally came into undisputed possession of the works. The Russian troops were coated with blood, which froze to their uniforms.

Control the Vistula.

By holding Plock the Russians control the Vistula, which has been serving as an important line of communication for the Germans, it is declared here. Several barges loaded with supplies and ammunition have already been captured. The Russian troops are said to be withstanding the hardships of the winter campaigning much better than the Germans. All the prisoners captured declare they have endured terrible suffering. Many have frosted or frozen feet and hands. Supply trains have been wrecked and there is a shortage of warm clothing for the army.

EGYPTAINS AS A RULE APPRECIATE BRITAIN'S WORK IN THEIR INTERESTS

London, Dec. 2.—The Cairo correspondent of The Daily Telegraph cables an interview given to him by Rushdi Pasha on the advantages of British rule in Egypt.

"England is the natural protector of Egypt on many grounds," said the Prime Minister. "Her pre-eminence in Egypt assures for her that the great highway to the east will be kept open. Her control safeguards the European financial interests in Egypt, and to us it assures the integrity of our territory.

Appreciate England's Work.

"An [illegible] majority of Egyptians appreciate Great Britain's work and [illegible] every ground would greatly [illegible] a break in England's interest in the country. We shall have more hope of realizing our ambitions to become an important state if we work under England's guidance. No other power could help us in the same way."

Rushdi Pasha spoke in warm terms of Lord Kitchener's work in Egypt and expressed the hope that when the British Secretary of War's task in England is finished he will return.

Praise For Kitchener.

"The Egyptians would be most happy to have Lord Kitchener back," he added. "One doesn't expect great soldiers to be statesmen, but Lord Kitchener has proved himself, by his clear sighted policy in Egypt, to be a statesman of the first rank."

LABOR PRES. SEES SILVER LINING TO PRESENT INDUSTRIAL DEPRESSION

Ottawa, Dec. 2.—Mr. J. C. Watters President of the Dominion Trades and Labor Congress, when asked his opinion to-day on the outlook for the winter in regard to unemployment, replied that it was [illegible] than he had [illegible] some time ago, although he still did not consider any too [illegible]. The large number of army [illegible] that were being let in Canada for [illegible] and [illegible] British Government as well as for the Allies meant abundance of work in many different industries and trade in general benefited from the prosperity of specific lines.

[illegible]

The [illegible] was taking a large number of the unemployed but it was to be remembered that a great many men were rejected and this left a problem still to be dealt with. In many parts of the country also men were having their pay cut down or working only part of the time as at the Crow's Nest coal mines, where some of the men who were merely living comfortably on regular work and wages now were working only two days a week.

Provincial Plan Criticised

Although most of the Provincial Premiers had assured the Federal Government that they could look after their own unemployed, Mr. Watters thought that it would have been better to have carried out the suggestion of calling a conference of representatives of the Federal and Provincial Governments, the big contractors and organized labor. Plans could have been made for co-operation in relieving unemployment.

The Allies on the Offensive Destroy Foe's Battery at Craonne

Paris, Dec. 2.—The German attacks upon the trenches recently taken by the allies in the region of Ypres, have been repulsed, the official communique from the war office states to-day. A vigorous offensive by the allies between the Aisne and the Lette Rivers on the main highway leading to the fortress of Laon, occupied by the Germans, is evident today in the official communique report of the fighting.

"At Craonne a German battery was destroyed," the communique states. "There was a heavy bombardment in the region of Vendresse." Vendresse is five miles west of Craonne and three miles north of the Aisne. It represents the nearest point to Laon attacked by the allies from the Aisne.

Paris, Dec. 2.—President Poincare and General Joffre, commander in chief of the French army, visited King George yesterday at the headquarters of General Sir John French, commanding the British forces. The President and General Joffre had luncheon and dinner with His Majesty. To-day it is likely King Albert of Belgium will join the party. President Poincare returned to Paris this morning. The President and King George visited the British army at the front together. They rode through the lines in an open automobile and were roundly cheered by the troops.

General Joffre accompanied President Poincare to the British headquarters but left before dinner there, at which King George, President Poincare, the Prince of Wales, General French and other British Officers were present.

Santiago, Chile, Dec. 2.—Anti-German riots are reported in Valparaiso to-day. Crowds gathered in the streets and stoned the German Consulate, and other buildings. The troops had to be called out, and several persons were wounded before peace was restored.

FOG PLAYS HAVOC WITH SHIPPING AND INDUSTRY IN UNITED STATES

New York, Dec. 2.—A fleet of fifteen ocean liners rocked at anchor in a heavy sea today at the entrance to New York harbour, fog-bound in the thickest mist that has mantled this section of the eastern seacoast for fifteen years. The Hudson River steamers did little more than drift with the tide, so heavy was the fog. Service to Albany was badly crippled; service to Boston was totally paralyzed.

The half million commuters that come daily from New Jersey, Long Island, and nearby New York State points were delayed from half an hour to an hour and a half. Trains crawled slowly past almost hidden semaphores.

Ferry boats plying to New Jersey and Brooklyn crept through a cloak of mist so dense that one could not see a boat's length ahead. The Hudson River tunnels were choked by the throngs that usually use the ferries and this delayed tunnel service, too.

Hardly half the ferries were operated. Save for them, the harbour was clear of all shipping.

The local weather bureau said the fog extended over a wider area of country than was ever covered by a single fog before; the observer placed its western boundary at the Mississippi River. Both the bureau and harbor officials pronounced it the heaviest fog of the twentieth century. It would continue all day and all night and travel out to sea tomorrow, the weather bureau said. By that time it will have lain over New York 48 hours, and the fog-bound fleet outside the harbour, it is believed, will have doubled.

IMMIGRATION OFFICERS GO TO THE WAR

Twenty-Three Canadian Officials Join Lord Kitchener's "Million Army"

Ottawa, Dec. 2.—No less than 23 officials of the Immigration Department in Great Britain have enlisted in Lord Kitchener's new army. Word to this effect has been received by Hon. Dr. Roche from J. Obed Smith, Commissioner of Immigration for the United Kingdom. Their positions have been held open for them if they survive the war.

The immigration campaign in Great Britain for the time being has been dropped. It is felt that it would be unpatriotic to do otherwise. However the sending of Canada's contingent across the Atlantic has drawn attention to the Dominion as never before, and it is expected that when hostilities cease the [illegible] immigration to Canada will be greater than ever.

The thousands of men in the army who have been drawn away from a sedentary life will be inclined, it is felt, to seek a new home in Canada rather than return to their offices and factories.

SHOT AT HIS FOREMAN AND THEN ESCAPED

Toronto, Dec. 2.—Andrea Simone, 414 Balliol street, foreman at some excavation work at Kingsdale subdivision, one mile north of the city limits, was fired at yesterday by some unknown person. The bullet passed through Simone's raincoat, badly scorching it. It is believed that the assailant may have been an Italian whom Simone discharged a short while ago. Several labourers claim they saw the man creep through the fog toward the foreman and fire at the latter before they could interfere. With the assistance of a bicycle which he had in readiness, the discharged laborer made his escape.

SERVIAN ARMY IN CRITICAL POSITION

London, Dec. 2.—In a despatch from Sofia, Bulgaria, the correspondent of Reuter's Telegraph Company says reports received there indicate that the situation in Servia is critical. The Servian army, it is declared has been withdrawn from Belgrade, and telegraphic communication between Belgrade and Nish, the present location of the capital, has been interrupted.

FLOATING ICE PIERCES CANOE FOUR MEN GO TO THEIR DEATH

Quebec Contractor and Guides and Trappers Drowned in Lake of Septiles, Above Three Rivers--Fierce Gale Drove Ice Against Canoe With Disastrous Results--Search Party Report Recovery of Wrecked Boat

Quebec, Dec. 2.—When the heavy ice, shoved by a strong gale, pierced their canoe in four places early this week, four men were sent to a horrible death by drowning in the Lake of Septiles in the Shawinigan district, above Three Rivers. Among the dead is Lawrence Page, a contractor for the Gres Falls Lumber, Pulp and Paper Company, of Three Rivers, a former Montrealer.

Mr. Page perished with three other men, guides and helpers, Philip Lafreniere, aged 50, of St. Elie; Frank Chote, Shawinigan Falls, and John Berthiaume, of St. Mathieu, aged 50, and married.

According to what news could be got from the remote region, Mr. Page with his companions left Gres Falls some forty miles above Three Rivers, on November 17, and crossed Lake Wapizagong without mishap although there was a strong gale at the time, and the surface covered with ice. They retired at Elf Page's own camp. When the party failed to arrive at Three Rivers fears were at once entertained for their safety, and a relief party was sent up the St. Maurice, and after a long search in the woods, lakes and streams they found Mr. Page's canoe with four large holes bored through its bottom. The canoe was lying in a small creek of Lake Septiles, and no trace of the bodies could be found.

REPORTED THAT GERMANS HAVE ONCE MORE TURNED FACES TO SEA

ed their faces towards the sea and
"Once more the Germans have turnare trying to hack their way to Calais and the sea. A new army has been brought up on the scene, and a new road has been chosen, and it is rumored that the German fleet will not be idle.

Telegraphing from West Flanders, the correspondent of the Daily Mail says: "Heavy fighting has begun near Elverdinghe, northwest of Ypres, after the longest pause of the war. Prodigious artillery fire by the Germans has been resumed near Ramscapelle and Pervyse."

SEWER CONSTRUCTION AT VICTORIA MAY BE COMMENCED NEXT WEEK

T . . .

Chairman Alderman Duncan presiding. There were also present Mayor Buller, Aldermen Duffus, McIntyre, Saunders, Johnston and Weir.

The engineer was authorized to pre- regular weekly session last night.

The City's Board of Works met in pare plans and profiles of a drainage system for the whole city. Plans for this work will be ready for working from next spring, when work will be commenced first in East City. This was the motion of Aldermen McIntyre and Weir.

On suggestion of his worship, this Board will recommend that the Council proceed at once with constructing sewer connection with the Victoria Heights. The object is to provide work at this time, when it is so badly needed.

PROLIDE MANY SCHOOLS FOR SETTLERS CHILDREN ALONG G. T. P. IN WEST

The educational department of the Government of British Columbia is taking active measures to cope with the rapid development in the territory recently opened up by the completion of the Grand Trunk Pacific. Mr. G.H. Gower, Educational Inspector, has been actively engaged during the past month in inaugurating schools between Prince George and Prince Rupert.

Since leaving Prince Rupert, Mr. Gower has established schools at Hazelton and Copper River on the Skeena, one at Endako and one at Stellako, five miles east of Endako; one at Vanderhoof, one at Chilco, on the opposite side of the Nechaco, from Vanderhoof, and one at Mapes, about eighteen miles south and east of Vanderhoof. He has also recommended the opening of a school at McAllister, about twelve miles north of Soda Creek.

"My trip," said Inspector Gower, "has been a revelation to me. I have travelled along the line of the G.T.P. stopping at all points where schools are located and visiting others where requisitions have been made to establish schools, and everywhere I was impressed with the splendid valleys of agricultural land, the development of which is going on apace. The [illegible] valley particularly appealed to me, and there is bound to be a tremendous trade developed."

Gems and Nonsense

Tombstones are about the only things that speak well of a man when he is down.

The cooing stops with the honeymoon, but the billing goes on for ever.

It is poor consolation to the girl who has been stung by a bee to know that bees are partial to sweet things.

The Paris police have been supplied with special pistols containing suffocating gas, by means of which they can stupefy a man and so prevent loss of life. There will, of course, be no escape with this gas.

The Cost of Strikes

The latest available statistics show that during the past 12 years there were 1,319 labor strikes in Canada, involving 319,[illegible] men. Nine million working days were thus lost at a cost to the country of $18,000,000 figured at an average wage of $2 per day.

Concrete Bridge Floors

Mr. L. C. Smith, engineer for the Michigan State Highway Commission, advises the use of concrete wherever possible in the replacing of floors on old steel or wrought iron bridges, even though this may necessitate the laying of new steel stringers.

THE CLOCK AND THE BOY

Frank E. Lahey, a teacher in an English high school, announced recently the results of his investigations of boys. He says that boys are at their best at 10 a.m. and at their worst at 4 in the afternoon.

TIMING BOXING MATCHES

A mechanical device to keep time in prize fights and indicate the number of rounds has been invented by a jeweler.

This timer will do away with the shortening or lengthening of rounds to favor a fighter—something that has been done in the past.

The timer is a large dial with four figures as indicated by the drawing. The hand consumes a minute moving from one figure to another, and a bell rings every time it reaches the naught and the figure three.

A CORK CLOTHES-PEG

It protects the Garment and Does Not Let it Slip off

Using a nail instead of a hook for hanging clothing has a decided disadvantage because cloth is liable to be torn by the sharp, rough head of the nail. If a long cork or one or two short corks are driven on the nail before it is put in the wall or closet door, the clothes will be protected and the nail hanger or peg will give as good service as a more expensive hook.

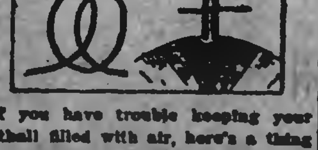
Keeps Air in Football



If you have trouble keeping your football filled with air, here's a thing that might help you. The leakage is probably caused by your failure to tie a proper knot in the cord over the outlet valve of the inner rubber ball. Or if there is an automatic valve it may leak and a knotted string over the end would help. Make one loop with a cord and then another just like it, as shown in Fig. 1. Pass the end of the cord under the first loop and then pull both ends. The knot will never become loosened until you loose on it. The way to make this knot was held as a prized secret for many years by a famous English football team.

SICKNESS AT SEA

Many Reasons For the Trouble and How to Deal With It

Two problems with regard to seasickness have never been solved: what causes it and what cures it. The ship's surgeon of a giant liner says:—

"Its peculiarity is that it is not amenable to any one line of treatment or to any one drug. What helps one may be of no use whatever to another. Many of the so-called remedies are worse than the original complaint. Why not be stoical about it? The fact remains that, after a spell of seasickness, unless too severe, one feels much the better for it."

Bismuth and soda, tincture of iodine, chloral, veronal, stay in bed, don't stay in bed, flannel bandages, chewing cloves to keep the stomach warm, whisky and soda, blue glasses—the list of alleged remedies has no ending. Alas! they are for the most part but snares and delusions. But some measures may be taken that will make your misery short-lived. Keep quiet the night before you sail. Pick the largest boat possible, but one that has little vibration. Get your cabin fairly well amidships. Apply for a deck-chair early, and have it put amidships.

Avoid the habit of lying in your chair and watching to see how far forward the horizon line is going to run along the rail of the next pitch. Keep out on deck as much as possible. If you get to feel poignantly miserable, and conclude that you would feel better if you could only have it over with—usually a wise conclusion—get up suddenly and poke your head into the smoking room, or take a look over the rail, or walk away out on the stern. Any one of these is an excellent precipitant. Take some regular exercise every day. So long as you are well, be careful of your food. But the moment you become sick, eat anything you want. Heaven knows you won't want enough to hurt you!

COMPENSATION FOR FAT

Lords Decide Against Scottish Miner's Incapacity Claim

A Scottish collier's highly original claim for compensation was considered so good a test of the Workmen's Act that it reached the House of Lords, and was solemnly adjudicated upon.

The miner met with an accident in the course of his work, and duly recovered, his employers paying him compensation up to the day he returned to work. But on trying his hand at the miner's pick again he discovered that he had grown too fat for the colliery.

Reasoning that his fat had come during convalescence, he claimed that his disability was part of the accident, and that compensation should be paid him till he was thinned sufficiently to make work in the mines acceptable again.

First the question went to arbitration. The arbitrator found that the incapacity for work had ceased immediately on his recovery, fat or no fat. The Court of Session in Scotland, however, upheld the miner.

AUSTRALIA'S PROGRESS

Western Australia's total population is less than 350,000, but there are over 100,000 accounts open in the savings bank of that State, and a total of $32,500,000 to the credit of the depositors.

Australia's factories increased in one year by over 400, the number of hands employed 15,000, the salaries by over $15,000,000, the value of plant and machinery by $25,00,000, material used by $40,000,000, value added by manufacture $35,000,000, and the total output by $75,000,000.

The annual mineral production of the Commonwealth of Australia is worth over $115,000,000, or several millions sterling more than the gross revenue of all the Australian railways. Close on 100,000 persons are engaged in mining in the Commonwealth, and probably quite half a million are directly dependent on it.

The average nominal rate of wages paid to males employed in the Australian factories, according to the Commonwealth Statistician, is $9.96 per week and $4.72 for females.

Rather Breaks His Back

It was stated at a Margate inquest that Mr. Albert Smith, of Harrow, who was an expert swimmer, dived from a bathing machine into two feet of water, and, striking the sand, fractured his spine.

An enclosed cabin to protect its passengers from flying spray features one of the latest hydro-aeroplanes.

Why Our Little Girls Run Away from Home

By Winifred Black

Copyright, 1914, by Newspaper Feature Service, Inc.

Winifred Black

THE Kermess was over, the May festival was done and there wasn't going to be another thing to do till the Feast of the Roses in June—so the little Chicago girl ran away from home. She couldn't stand it another day. It was so dull.

She had a good home with a devoted mother and a father who smiled at her [illegible] work.

She had a pretty room of her own all furnished daintily in her own particular colors. She had a closet full of pretty dresses and a bureau full of dainty frills and ruffles.

There were a dozen brand new hair ribbons in the top drawer; there were a truly gold locket and chain and a bracelet and three or four rings and some little fancy pins in her Japanese jewel box of enamel. And down stairs in the breakfast room there was a silver cup with her name on it, and a crystal cup with her monogram inlaid on it in platinum. The house was full of photographs of the little girl.

This happened in Chicago. And the same week a little girl in New Orleans ran away; she's been discontented and lonely ever since the Mardi Gras. And out in San Francisco a pretty little girl was so bored after the May Day festival was over that she ran away, too.

They all came back, poor little things, weeping and crushed and half-broken-hearted; they all came back safe—by some miracle.

How They Went Home.

The little Chicago girl went as far as Indianapolis, and there a man stared at her in the street and she began to cry and some one took her to the police station, and they telegraphed her father and he came and took his little girl home—to be bored again.

The negro stewardess thought there was something peculiar about her, and the gangplank hadn't been up for half an hour before the whole story was out. At the next landing the little girl gave a cry of delight, for there on the wharf was her big brother, very pale and stern, but her big brother just the same, and she was so glad to see him that she cried and laughed all in the same breath.

The little San Francisco girl didn't get very far either, poor, pretty, frightened little thing. She came home with her father and her sister, and there was a great welcome for her and she said she would never go out into the wide world again alone—never, never.

I wonder if any of the parents of any of these children have thrown away any of the photographs of the little girl in fancy dress.

It is a terrible thing to go to school and wear an everyday giddy suit with your hair in a braid, when you've been Columbine at a flower carnival, and had everybody staring at you in your gorgeous dress.

And how foolish grown people are to think that they can "boss" a wondrous creature who has ridden through the public streets on a public float, with her curl hair down around her face, and her pretty ankles showing.

How pretty they are, the fiestas and the water carnivals and the flower fetes and the school dances and the street parades, how gay they make life for us these days.

In a Perpetual Festival.

Why, it's like living in a perpetual festival. How sweet they look, the young women in their beautiful soft dresses, and the little girls, all in pink and blue, blue and clear yellow, all clad in silk and crowned with flowers—why, they are visions—pictures of delight!

Who can look at them without a thrill of real pleasure? And yet, somehow, I wonder if it is quite the thing to put the little creatures on exhibition so freely and so often.

Don't you remember how you felt when the last day of school was over—in the old times?

You made wreaths for days, you hung mottoes for hours; you practised your little speech of welcome for weeks, and when it was all over how dull and stupid and prosaic the everyday world looked to you. Don't you remember?

I was Queen of the May once at a little Sunday school picnic. I think my dress was too short and I know my white slippers were too big, for they kept falling off just in the most important part of the proceedings; but it took me weeks to get over the affair.

"George Washington, John Adams, Thomas Jefferson"—what in the world did I care who was President when the war of the revolution began? Why should I care for such mere prosaic details? I, the Queen of the May, who had had my picture in the county paper and three lines about me right under it!

Sweet, sweet, sweet—how sweet they are, the little girls, when we let them stay little girls.

I wonder if we aren't going to do it any more!

The Good Night Story

The Crystal Ball :: By VERNON MERRY

A WITCH once had three sons, but she did not trust them, fearing they would rob her of her power. So she turned the eldest into an eagle and the second into a whale. The youngest ran away from home.

During his travels he learned that in a castle, called the Castle of the Golden Sun, there lived a beautiful Princess under the spell of a sorcerer, and he longed to set her free.

For weary long days and nights he wandered through the forests and over the mountains, and it was not until he was almost exhausted that he saw on a mountain side a castle that shone like gold.

Through many great rooms he went seeking the Princess, to find at last only an old, ugly woman. "I am the King's daughter," she told him, the tears running down her cheeks, "but I am under a terrible spell.

"You must climb to the top of this mountain," she explained, "and there kill a wild buffalo. Then destroy a phoenix which will rise out of his body. In it you will see a red-hot egg. Break this, and, instead of the yolk, there will be a crystal ball. If you take this ball to the sorcerer, his power will end."

The youth soon found the buffalo and, after a terrible fight, it lay dead. At once the fiery bird flew from the body and would have escaped had not the eagle, eldest brother, [illegible]. The eagle drove the bird toward the sea. Then he so wounded the phoenix that it dropped the egg, which fell upon a fisherman's hut and set it on fire. Had not the second brother, the whale, spouted up a large column of water the hut would have been destroyed. Then the young man hastened to the sorcerer and held the ball before him.

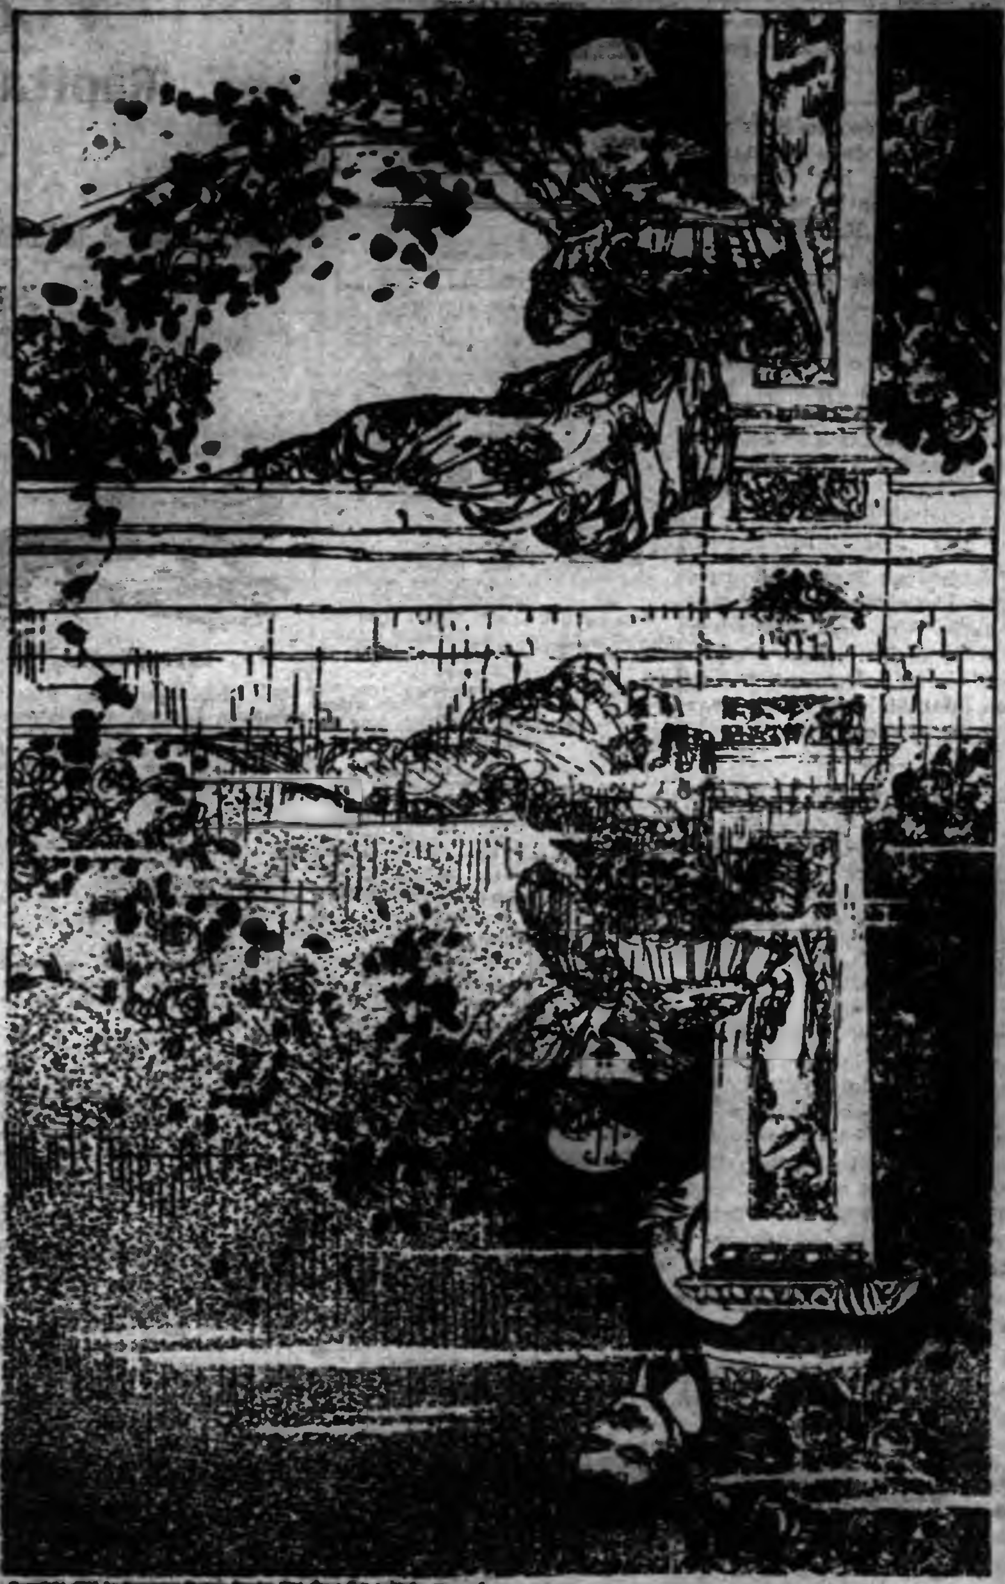
The youth then returned to the castle and found the Princess restored to beauty. With joyful hearts they pledged their love.

REFLECTIONS ▪ ▪ ▪ By Michelson



Copyright, 1914, by Newspaper Feature Service, Inc. Great Britain Rights Reserved.

NOTHING suggests reflections like a pretty pool. You think of all sorts of curious, romantic, impossible and perhaps possible things while you look into its cool green depths.

Down under the azure reflections of the sky YOUR reflections carry you in search of images you might never think of looking for anywhere else in the world.

And the odd thing is that unless you lean very far over you can't see yourself and you can't see what is BEHIND you.

All this is part of the wonder and fantasy of reflections. Sometimes the two kinds of reflections tell the same story. But you have to be very wise and very adroit to find this out. Turning your head VERY quickly might answer the same purpose.

Peter's Adventures in Matrimony

By LEONA DALRYMPLE

Author of the new novel, "Diane of the Green Van," awarded a prize of $10,000 by Ida M. Tarbell and S. S. McClure as judges.

The truth about "the girl in the case" distinguishes this new series by Miss Dalrymple. Her character studies will not appear unfamiliar to the majority of readers, who will follow the fortunes of "Peter" with interest.

No. 60.

Nature's Age Wall.

LEONA DALRYMPLE

"MOTHER," said I one evening in her sitting room, "why do women fuss so much more over age than men do?"

"Well," said mother, thoughtfully, "custom has built up some age conventions that are a little stupid. That I imagine is the chief reason."

"Unfair?" said I. "How? We all grow old alike. We all wrinkle and lose our teeth and eyesight and our hair grows gray. Indeed, in some ways the woman has much the better time of it, I should say, for, with advancing years, all sorts of privileges come to her. Her family, particularly if she has daughters, spare her many things, whereas the man keeps his nose to the grindstone until he dies."

"The unfairness comes," said mother, "in a great many different ways. There are utterly different standards of youth for men and women, seek to ignore them as we will. A man of 35 is frequently called a young man. A woman of 35 is rarely called a young woman. A man's physical appearance is judged with absolute disregard of his years. Not so the woman. There is always present the notion of what she must have been in her youth. If she is still handsome at 50, you'll hear the comment: 'What a stunning girl she's been in her time!' With the man, the comment is merely: 'He's a mighty handsome fellow.' Nobody bothers about what he has been. They take him for what he is."

"That's true," said I faintly.

"Take a school class of girls and boys of the same age. Most of the girls marry before they are 25. Generally the boys wait. Economic conditions make them wait. Around 30 they, too, begin to marry—and they marry whom? Not the single girls of their own age. They marry girls in the early twenties. These years have made nothing like the difference to the boys that they have to the girls.

"They marry the younger girls," I suggested, "because the girls of their own age are mostly married."

"No," said mother, "it isn't entirely that. Men have been taught that there is a marriageable age in woman, and when they're looking for a wife they instinctively turn to that marriageable class. Let's take for further example a woman of 25 or 27. If she marries at that age she is logically expected to marry a man somewhere in the forties, early or late. This immediately puts her in a somewhat middle-aged crowd. The man of the same age will take a young wife of 21 or so and propel himself back into the young crowd. It makes a tremendous difference."

"Umm!" said I doubtfully. "That may be all right for a time, mother, but when your young wife of 21 or so is 35 and the man is in his late forties, then the difference begins to tell. She is still young, but he's getting along into the middle-aged class. When she is 45, the difference in years is accented a little more. And by and by when the wife is still young enough to love the energy and activity of life, the man is beginning to develop a taste for the chimney corner. Then there are disadvantages."

"Still," said mother, "the disadvantage in most cases lies pretty much with the woman. The only years of interest in an unmarried woman seem to be from 18 to 25. After that people begin to ask because she isn't married. The man, on the other hand, may stay single as long as he chooses. Always he has much the better chance of unhampered life by reason of the fact that nobody [illegible] him to take a mate too early. He may wait until he is 35 or 40 [illegible]. The woman [illegible]."

"[illegible]," said I, "there is Nature's [illegible] it all."

"There is," agreed mother. "The later the marriageable age of woman, the fewer the children. Nature built up this wall of age conventions to conserve the race."

Secrets of Health and Happiness

What "In-Thinking" Is; How It Affects Every One

By DR. LEONARD KEENE HIRSHBERG

A. B., M. A., M. D. (Johns Hopkins).

DR. HIRSHBERG

"AH, the evils of this day! Ah, the terrible times!"

Have you heard these expressions recently? Do you know the anti-vice societies and the uplifters? Do they say these things?

Most certainly they do, but these words were just translated from a "newspaper" between 8000 and 11,000 years old. In other words, Assyrian bricks, just unearthed in Babylonia's old neighborhood.

The cuneiform inscriptions printed upon clay "newspapers" and brick-like moulds speak of ethics, smoking, vice and drinking just as the in-thinkers do today.

Set me down as an optimist and a happy pessimist, in the fashion of Brand Whitlock, on the social evil. The unhappy women must not have things done to them, but for them.

The women hunt and the various white slave laws are unchristian, unjust and impossible. They are the outcome of the uplift malady, which will now be described as in-thinking.

In-thinking is a malady which is epidemic at present. Among its pernicious activities and resultant symptoms is a pathological concern with other people's behavior. Not conduct, mark you, but behavior—an entirely different thing.

When suffragettes concern themselves with cigarette smoking, liquor drinking, the behavior of husbands toward their wives, the man and religion forward movement, hygiene, etc., they are in-thinking instead of attending strictly to the business in hand to obtain logically what they properly deserve, namely, votes for women.

When sincere Sunday school superintendents who are simultaneously in the coffee, tea or grocery business advocate the immorality of booze and rum, they are, so to speak, mixing their religious metaphors and suffering with the Joan of Arc delusion of in-thinking.

In-thinking, like ingrowing toenails, is just as malodorous under any other name. Sometimes it passes muster for "reform," sometimes for "a great benefactor," again for "uplifting," "forward looking," "attention to the public weal," and the like.

Actually it is an endemic American ailment properly called "minding other folks' business," "the man hunt," "the woman hunt," the self-anointment and personal glorification of the in-thinkers versus the multitude of thinkers.

In sooth, it is about time that this panegyric and flap-doodle of amphibian-blooded persons be tagged and labelled by its true, pathological and anti-physiological name.

It is high time that the modern Savonarolas and Maids of Orleans be called, not tenderly but truly, by their self-deceiving first names.

Useful Hints for the Housewife

By Ann Marie Lloyd

A FROWSY housemaid reflects discredit on the housewife. The maid who admits the visitor is as subtle an indication of the thoroughness of the house as are the cleanliness, order and cheeriness of the front hall.

In the average home, where only one maid is kept and she is a maid-of-all-work, there is not the opportunity for trim and attractive livery as where there are more maids; but, even with the one, there is no excuse for her being untidy or dressed in a nondescript costume of plaid shirt waist and woollen skirt with an apron of uncertain style.

There are establishments in all large cities where special attention is given to service clothes, and if the housekeeper does not care to attend personally to the maid's clothes, she may send her there with the assurance that she will be correctly outfitted.

The morning dress of the houseworker should be of chambray or seersucker in some light color which pleases the mistress of the house. Pink and blue are the two colors most chosen, although there is a shade of gray which looks neat and a tone of light tan, almost the shade that is known as "natural," that is permissible. There should be a turned over collar of white and a generous apron with bretelles of white lawn which reach almost to the hem of the dress. This may be perfectly plain or have an embroidery edge. Hemstitching is a good finish.

Where one maid is kept this dress is seldom changed for luncheon, but there is a distinct apron which is neither so enveloping or so plain. It reaches about to the knees, is of finer material and has more elaboration.

For afternoon wear and for serving dinner, the plain, well fitted gown of alpaca in some dark color or black is chosen. Also there is a standing collar and band cuffs of white and a frivolous bit of apron.

It is entirely a matter of preference what color the afternoon dress shall be. One well known American woman has her maids in white at all hours of the day. Another chooses pale gray for the afternoon livery.

Prune color, to match the livery of the men-servants, is the choice of another, and a soft, dull blue is liked by others. Gray or black is a safe choice for the average woman.

The collar and cuffs are made of organdie, lawn or satin and are simple and fit snugly. The apron may be of varying shapes, either rounded at the edge or pointed, with wide bretelles that are kept in place on the shoulders. A narrow lace edge makes an attractive finish.

There are several forms of the cap intended for the more formal dress, and frequently it is adorned with a neat bow to match the color of the dress. The maid of all work should be provided with several all covering gingham aprons to wear in the kitchen. Those which are cut on the lines of a dress with good-size sleeves which slip over the dress are the most practical. They should be quite as long as the dress and reach around the figure so they afford ample protection.

Where there are two maids, there is not the slightest excuse, save that of ignorance or carelessness, for not having them always attractively and correctly garbed. Also, there is opportunity to have the "second maid" dressed in daintier fashion than the one whose duties include kitchen work. Besides, there are little distinctions of cap and apron which belong to the station.

White is preferred as the uniform for nurses. There is a very wide linen that comes for sheeting that is practical if one buys the material by the yard and has the dresses made. The apron should be long, with a bib and tied with wide strings.

Advice to Girls

By ANNIE LAURIE

Dear Annie Laurie:

I am a young man of 22 and once had a friend who was dearly in love with me. A few months ago I made her acquainted with a boy friend of mine and she fell in love with him at first sight, and doesn't seem to care for me any more. What can I do to regain her affection? I am very unhappy. L. E.

SO you're 22, are you, and your friend was once dearly in love with you, and now she's in love with a boy friend of yours. Dear me, how tragic!

How old is this "boy," 25 or what?

Why didn't your friend choose a man to fall in love with while she was about it? What can you do to regain her affection? How in the world can I tell? I don't even know whether the lady is fair or dark, grave or gay, clever or stupid.

Why don't you try the old, old plan? You meet some one and fall in love, head over heels in love, at first sight.

Let your friend know about it, by accident, and when she speaks to you of it pretend to be embarrassed and ill at ease. Talk about the other girl, and then act as if you wish you hadn't.

Well, then, rave over eyes of blue.

Is she dainty and roly-poly and dimpled? Talk about the divine slenderness of your new flame.

If this doesn't work I don't know what else will, and you had better make up your mind to do without your friend who was once, upon a time so "dearly in love with you."

Annie Laurie

Miss Laurie will welcome letters of inquiry on subjects of feminine interest from young women readers of this paper and will reply to them in these columns. They should be addressed to her, care this office.

FUTURE OF ORIENTAL AND CHEAP FOREIGN COMPETITION

At St. Paul's Bible Class, where they are now comparing the ethics of Christian citizenship, and comparing the laws of to-day with those of Rome and with those outlined in the scriptures generally, Mr. Burnham, M. P., proceeded with his address Sunday. Questions arising from his remarks of the previous Sunday were put and answered. The future of Oriental and foreign cheaper competition engaged the attention of the class. The questions asked considered the statement that [illegible] was true as alleged that foreign cheap labour was a danger, how is it that it has not been so in the past, and [illegible] ask the fact that it is inefficient, the real reason that is cheap and unable to compete with western labour? Mr. Burnham replied that the east was just awakening from its long sleep of prejudice against the west, and its chains of caste. The west, which had only recently developed itself, the U. S. chiefly since the Civil War, Germany since 1870, had by reason of enterprise and capital acquired a free hand, but China had begun to [illegible] the fence [illegible] to the U. S. [illegible] There were already arising instances in both India and China. Those who refused to see a menace to highly-paid western labour and the comfort and civilization of the masses of the western peoples, would wake up to it before long. In Western Canada and the U.S. [illegible] the labourers [illegible] worked for less wages, were capable and clean, and displaced of Canadian and American labour. As it was with foreign cheap labour so is it with foreign cheap goods. They would swamp the Canadian and the U. S. trade if not held back. The whole centre of gravity in the manufacturing and producing world might now, with the awakening of the east and the advent of capital, be changed. Now, too, when properly trained and [illegible] modern troops are sound to some, [illegible] at the [illegible] little Japan, the east may strive for a complete independence of the domination and control of western powers. They have the labour, [illegible] have the capital. Put these both together, either in the west by immigration, or in the east by the introduction of capital, and where will the masses of the western world be in a quarter of a century? The brotherhood of Man he said meant not potential equality but kind treatment.

Mourning in Europe

The hopes and fears, the activities and miseries, of the people of the nations involved in the European war, find expression in their press, which assuredly is not devoid of the human interest element in this period. There are columns of the names of killed, wounded and missing: some newspapers have pages of framed memorial notices—there are all the signs of half a world in mourning.

Peculiarly pathetic are some of the many small advertisements asking for news of loved ones. Under the heading "Tidings Wanted," one of these liners in an English paper says:

> "Will any kind comrade who was present when Lieut. E. R. E. Hickling, Gloster regiment, was wounded, also when he passed away, please write his mother."

> "Will any one who saw 6016 Lance-Corporal W. J. Phillips, of B Company, 1st Dorset regiment, reported killed October 13, communicate with his heart-broken young wife."

These pleas, bear in mind, are illustrative of the cruel anxiety, the bitter, uncontrollable sorrow, at this hour experienced in literally hundreds of thousands of European homes where only a few months ago the war was unthought of, no disaster was anticipated.

The Loss of the Bulwark

The official explanation of the blowing up of the British battleship "Bulwark", with a toll of nearly eight hundred lives is that it was due to an internal explosion during the handling of ammunition. But the explanation is so entirely unsupported by evidence that it falls quite short of conclusiveness.

It does not seem plausible that the vessel was the victim either of a mine or a submarine. Many vessels have been sunk by both these agencies during the present war, but none of them has disappeared with the suddenness of the "Bulwark," which was beneath the waves in three minutes, carrying with her practically her whole company.

The loss, therefore, palbably was due to another cause and that of an explosion in her magazine seems the most reasonable but it is pretty nearly incomprehensible that, in the time of a great war, there could be such carelessness in the highly disciplined British navy as to make a disaster like this possible.

It is not surprising, therefore, to learn that at least some of the British opinion associates the destruction of the ship with German initiative, nor difficult to fathom what probably is in the British mind.

Was the ship destroyed from the inside by a German patriot?

One of the marvels of the war is the perfect aplomb with which the German officer and private marches straight into the jaws of death. Both have shown themselves utterly callous to danger—on land or above, on sea or beneath.

If we are to believe a tithe of what has been written since the tocsin of war was sounded all the nations with which Germany is at war for years have been fairly honeycombed with German spies, preparing the way for sure victory when the day of clash should come.

What could be more natural then than that there should be scattered among the many ships of the British navy Carl Lodys waiting the opportunity for some such supreme patriotic sacrifice as might hake been responsible for this latest disaster to His Majesty's navy?

What German soldier or sailor, fighting with blind faith for the Fatherland, would hesitate freely to give up his own life if he knew the sacrifice would cut by a battle the disparity that exists between the navy of the Kaiser and those of his enemies!

Painful Swellings Reduced Muscular Strains Ended

Such Troubles Now Quickly Rubbed Away by Powerful Remedy.

If you have any muscles that are strained and weak, that are frequently subject to rheumatic pains; if you have any painful swellings that refuse to go away—get busy with Nerviline. This is the very sort of trouble that Nerviline is noted for curing quickly. "I have proved Nerviline simply a wonder in reducing a hard, painful swelling. It followed an injury I received in my left leg and caused me great pain and discomfort. The muscles were strained and sore, and no other remedy gave the ease and comfort I got from rubbing on Nerviline. There is a soothing, pain-relieving power about Nerviline that touched the root of my trouble. Nerviline reduced the swelling, it destroyed the pain, it brought my limb back to perfect condition." The experience of Mr. Bowen, whose home is in Middlesex, is not unusual. Thousands are proving every day that muscular pains of every kind, chronic rheumatism, lumbago, neuralgia and sciatica will yield to Nerviline when nothing else can possibly cure. Nerviline is an old-time family remedy, used nearly forty years with great success. The large family size bottle costs 50c., trial size 25c., at all dealers.

INTRODUCTION

The Glenaladale Silver Black Fox Company, Limited, was incorporated in 1913 with six pairs of foxes, at $90,000. This Company re-capitalized in 1914, with 20 pairs of beautiful Silver Black Foxes, at $15,000 per pair, making a total capitalization of $300,000.

THE FOXES

Six pairs (one year old) proven breeders, and fourteen pairs (1914 pups), making a total of 20 pairs—all young foxes—good for at least 10 years. This Company has bought some of this year's options on foxes with a guarantee that they are pedigreed and of the highest strain and very best quality P. E. Island famous foxes.

THE RANCH

The ranch is situated on the well known Glenaladale Farm, owned by Major C. McKinnon, formerly the homestead of Sir William McDonald, and is only 12 miles from Charlottetown, in a quiet locality sufficiently removed from any disturbance.

THE RANCHER

Mr. Arthur W. McKinnon, our Ranch Manager, has had much experience in breeding foxes, and has the practical knowledge necessary to efficiently manage and care for the animals.

The foxes will be ranched free of charge to the Company for the first year. This means a large saving to the shareholders, as some companies have to pay as high as 25 per cent. of the income for ranching purposes.

The promoters of this Company are retaining $60,000 worth of stock for themselves; $20,000 worth has already been disposed of, leaving $200,000 to be offered to investors at $25.00 per share, with a guarantee that a dividend of 50 per cent. will be paid in cash in 1915, or whatever more it may be.

The Glenaladale Silver Black Fox Co., Limited, in 1913 guaranteed a dividend of 50 per cent. but are going to pay 50 per cent. in cash and 50 per cent., in stock in 1914. The Company is in good standing and to each and every investor the first of September, 1914, we can say:—"We have given you 50 per cent. more than we promised." And we feel sure that in 1915 all the shareholders in this re-capitalized company will be able to say they received more than they were promised.

This Company can truthfully say that they have not one cent of watered stock in the Company. Now Mr. Investor, if you were a Company and we the shareholders, we would look to you for justice to give us all that was honestly due us. We would not like for you to buy 2 pairs of foxes at $15,000 per pair ($30,000) and form a fox company and capitalize your concern at $60,000 and make us pay, as shareholders, for it. The Glenaladale Silver Black Fox Company, Limited, will ask you to do nothing like that. We want to let you in on the ground floor.

NOTICE

When a fox company guarantees any specified dividend to its shareholders, and when said company is an incorporated body, you need not be afraid of any crooked play, for such company is compelled to pay what they promise, and, besides, every interest is taken for the welfare of both the investor and the company.

The promoters of this Company are all above board and will not permit any crook to come in and do anything that is not right. Anyone holding stock in this Company who is dissatisfied can, by notifying the Secretary-Treasurer, have his or her money promptly refunded.

FORTUNES IN FOXES

There is money in fox ranching more than anything else ever known. It is good for the rich man and good for the poor man. A poor man cannot buy a pair of Silver Black Foxes but he can easily raise $25.00, $50.00 or $100.00. By investing in this Company he gets back his money in at least two years and then he will have an income for life and for his children to come—and after there will be money in fox farming. One of the reasons for this is that P. E. Island has now 95 per cent. of the world's foxes in captivity. For every one pelt that can be raised there are more than 25 wealthy people waiting for it in London, Russia, France and America.

PELT VALUES

The Fox Pelts have advanced greatly in price since 1910 and you can see for yourself what money was in them then.

Below are the particulars of sale of a consignment of Silver Fox Furs, shipped from Prince Edward Island ranches to London, England, and sold there in March, 1910:

All cheques must be made payable to "The Glenaladale Silver Black Fox Co., Ltd."

A POINTER

Just to give you a little idea of what the free ranching of foxes means to the investor, we will figure it out for you.

We have twenty pairs of foxes in the ranch and suppose each pair produces a litter of only four foxes this is equal to 40 pairs and at $15,000 per year it would figure out at $600,000. Now, if we had to pay even 15 per cent. of the income for ranching purposes (which is considerably lower than some companies pay) it would mean that we would have to pay $90,000 for ranching expenses.

We ranch the foxes free for the first year, so that in addition to a guaranteed dividend of 50 per cent., we save you this large outlay of money. While we guarantee 50 per cent. still should each pair in our ranch produce four pups it would mean that your dividend would be about 200 per cent. instead of 50 per cent.

FINAL WORD

A great deal has been written about Ranches, Grades of Foxes, etc., but after all the one object that every investor should keep before him is the dividend he is going to get. We have tried to show you in plain English what we can do for you and now that you have our proposition, compare it with the offer made by any other company now in Business— and then judge for yourself to have been [illegible] by some of the Charlottetown daily newspapers.

GERMANS ARE SUFFERING MUCH IN POLAND

Lemberg, Galicia, via Petrograd and London, Dec. 1.— The energetic Russian advance is persistently pushing back the Austrians into Cracow. Information reaching Lemberg from a trustworthy source is to the effect that the Austrians are evacuating position after position, with very large losses.

It is stated that the Austrian line of retreat is strewn so thickly with the dead that the Russians have not time to bury them. The cold is so severe that the bodies are frozen.

German officers are in supreme command at Cracow. They are placing machine guns, light artillery, and wireless apparatus it is reported, on the cathedral and other historical edifices, drawing the fire of the Russians to these buildings.

Recent arrivals from Provinces of Galicia state that the inhabitants of all the regions evacuated by the Austrians are facing famine.

Frost-Bitten Germans.

Petrograd, via London, Dec. 1.— The condition of German prisoners captured in the region of Lodz is said to resemble that of the French troops during Napoleon's retreat from Moscow. Many of them have frozen hands and feet. They were wrapped in blankets and shawls taken from the peasants. One private wore a woman's fur wrap. The prisoners say that before their capture their courage was kept up by statements that the quartermaster was bringing warm clothes, which would be distributed in a few days.

The reported use by the Germans of monasteries, chapels, and other public buildings in captured towns as barracks, stables, and gun stations is explained by the prisoners as due to the reason that the private buildings had been mined.

On the Vistula River.

Reports from the front are that reinforcements sent for the army of Gen. Mackensen, near Lodz, are taking up positions along the Vistula river, where the German resistance seems to have been least effective. The apparent purpose of this move is to hinder the Russian enveloping movement until the main German column is entrenched on the line which runs from Strykow through Gelow to [illegible].

Semi-official reports from Galicia indicate that the Russian advance along the foothills of the Carpathian Mountains has reached a point due south of Cracow, thus surrounding the city from the north-east and south.

Motor Bikes in Egypt

Motor cycles are coming into extensive use in the cities and suburban roads of Egypt, the topography of the country being generally favorable for sport and practical cycle riding. The machines used are almost all of French, Swiss and English make.

Canada Life Service

The Canada Life management studies to extend and broaden its service to the policyholders, while constantly aiming at increased efficiency. The Company is quick to adopt any measure which will promote either.

An Example of Canada Life Usefulness

By means of an annual deposit with the Company, a man may now arrange that in the event of his death his wife, or other dependent, will at once enter on an income of, say, $50 per month. This sum is beyond the reach of poor investments and is absolutely assured to her for life—or for a minimum of 240 payments to the estate should the beneficiary die. The amount of the guaranteed monthly payment may be adjusted to suit the means of the assured.

This is the ideal provision in that it furnishes a guaranteed income for life, payable every month. As it may be provided through moderate annual payments to the Company, it is within the reach of every business man.

Please Read Carefully and Note!

THAT Oil authorities are agreed the Alberta Oil Field is of an anticlinal formation. It has been fairly accurately ascertained in what general direction these anticlines run. Geologist B. W. THAT Cunningham Craig, one of the world's most eminent geologists, selected the site of the Mowbray-Berkeley well. Stock in that company is not offered at any price. We possess acreage adjoining the Mowbray-Berkeley (Section 12, Township 28, Range 5, West of 5th). If a strike is made at the Mowbray-Berkeley what will shares in our company be worth?

CREED FOR A FARMER

I believe in a permanent agriculture, a soil that shall grow richer rather than poorer from year to year.

I believe in 100-bushel corn and 50-bushel wheat, and I shall not be satisfied with anything else.

I believe that the only good weed is a dead weed, and that a clean farm is as important as a clean conscience.

I believe in the farm boy and in the farm girl, the farmer's best crops and the future's best hope.

I believe in the farm woman, and will do all in my power to make her life easier and happier.

I believe in a country school that prepares for country life, and a country church that teaches its people to love deeply and live honorably.

I believe in community spirit, a pride in home and neighbors, and I will do my part to make my community the best in the province.

I believe in the farmer, I believe in farm life, I believe in the inspiration of the open country.

I am proud to be a farmer, and I will try earnestly to be worthy of the name.—Frank I. Mann.

Strictly speaking, however, the contrivance on her head is not a bonnet. It's the baby's basket.

THROAT COMPLAINTS

Sudden chilling of bare feet, coddling, mouth-breathing, over-crowded and over-heated dwellings and impure air sometimes serve as the first wedge.

Sore throat in young or old should not be neglected. The first and best principle of treating it is not to get it.

Avoid contact with people whom you know to have sore throat.

Sore throat among children should always be a matter of immediate and serious consideration; because—

They "catch" it more easily.

They cannot be depended on to guard against it.

It is more often diphtheric.

Their resistance to disease is not as great as that of a grown person.

The safest thing to do, if the child has a sore throat is to call in a physician.

TASTEFUL DRESSING MEANS MUCH TO GIRLS

They Should be Taught the Difference Between Smartness and Loudness in Colors and Hats

The future success in life of a girl may and often does depend upon her taste in dress. There isn't a bit of use in disguising this fact from ourselves, for it is the simple truth, as anyone with an experience of the world can testify. Have we not all seen the pretty dowdy passed by for her plain but smart rival?

A dull-colored, unbecoming, badly made gown can work tragedy in the career of a girl, although she may have pretty hair, good teeth, and a nice complexion. Whatever you teach a girl, teach her the value of wearing clothes that suit her.

Don't let her grow up with the idea that one new gown is as good as another—and, of all things, don't let her get the notion into her head that the cost is the chief thing that counts in clothing.

A certain woman never pays less than $30 each for her hats—hideous hats—because they are quite evidently bought as high, expensive hats, and nothing else. They have no connection of any kind with her complexion or the color of her hair and eyes.

She never seems to have on a new hat, strange to say; they all bear the mark of the dowdy upon them; though if you picked them to pieces you would no doubt find that they were made of the best materials.

In the endeavor to avoid dowdiness, however, don't let your girl grow up to mistake an outer appearance for "smartness."

Smartness does not consist in a hat perched at an outrageous angle upon an impossible mop of hair, six inches high and a shrill-colored gown. Smartness is not "loudness" in color and bad taste in style, and if you can teach girls this you will be doing them a real service.

Smartness, be it ever so smart, will not jar the [illegible], for the "loud" style and color will [illegible].

Another valuable lesson for little girls to learn is suitability in dress. Many mothers fail to instill into their daughters' minds that dress for business hours, for morning hours, for working hours can hardly be too plain and unobtrusive. Dress unsuited to the occasion is, unless it be accidental, a pretty sure mark of want of culture and good breeding.

THE SIGHING HABIT

It Usually Means That the Lungs Need Fresh Air

Sighing is often an audible expression of some emotion. But often it is an involuntary inspiration and respiration caused by insufficient oxygen in the body.

Sighing is then a [illegible] indicator. In such cases it is merely another name for oxygen starvation, and it should be taken as a warning.

Often the person who has become subject to the sighing habit will find, on self-examination that she is in a more or less rundown condition.

The remedy is frequently the rearrangement of conditions which will make it possible to have more air—more free, fresh air to breathe.

If you are a "sigher," index the air facilities and ventilation in the place or places in which you customarily work or live.

If you are sighing and don't know any good reason for the action, get up and open a window; go through a few simple exercises; move around briskly; get some more air into your lungs and then go back to the occupation of the hour. You will probably find your sighing tendency diminishing and finally disappearing altogether.

VARIOUS METHODS OF PRESERVING EGGS

They Must be Fresh in the First Place and Should be Scrupulously Clean

There is no better method of preserving eggs than in water-glass, or soluble silicate of soda, which is not an expensive material to buy, as a pound, which only costs a very few cents, dissolved in the correct proportion of water, will preserve a large number. The amount of water to be added depends upon the sample, but as full directions are usually sent with each tin, it is difficult to go wrong. The eggs are placed in a glazed vessel, and covered with the liquid, care being taken that all the eggs are submerged. When they are wanted for use, they should be gently lifted out of the liquid, wiped dry, and used as speedily as possible.

The oldest, but still a very excellent method of preserving is by means of salt, lime and water. Four gallons of lime, one of salt, and twenty of water, should be mixed together, and when the water has taken into solution as much lime and salt as it is capable of doing, it should be allowed to settle, the clear liquid being used to pour over the eggs, which have previously been placed in a suitable vessel. This method has the disadvantage of making the shells rough and extremely brittle—so much so, in fact, that as a rule eggs that have been preserved in lime cannot be boiled, the shells cracking with the least touch. When eggs are to be preserved for only a very short time—for two or three months—dry salt answers admirably, but this is an unsuitable method for a longer period.

If a new-laid egg be dipped into boiling water, it slightly coagulates the white, and so prevents the air getting to the contents. For home use this method is suitable, but it does not answer when the eggs are for market. Smearing with vaseline or butter keeps the contents fresh for a week or two, but is not recommended for more than a month.

Only perfectly fresh eggs should be preserved, and it is largely a waste of labor and money to attempt keeping eggs that are more than two or three days old when placed in the preservative. They should be allowed to settle twelve hours after being laid, but the sooner after this time they can be treated the better will they be when they are wanted for use. Dirty eggs do not preserve at all well, and if there is any dirt on the shells they should be washed. A dirty egg has an injurious effect not only on its own contents, but on all those that come into contact therewith. As infertile eggs preserve better than those containing a germ, it is advisable when producing eggs with this end in view to keep the hens apart from the male birds.

OUR PUBLIC SPIRIT

Scotchman Says Unpleasant Things About Canadians

A young Scotchman, after three years in the Canadian West, wrote a letter to the London Spectator describing in unvarnished terms some of the Canadian characteristics, says The Ottawa Citizen. They can hardly be said on the whole to be complimentary, which doubtless makes their expression all the more valuable from the Canadian standpoint. It is always well to "see oursels as ithers see us," and a touch of Scotch opinion may in this case help to improve the spirit of Canada. One of his criticisms regarding the latter is as follows:

"Nor does the public spirit of the Dominion strike a stranger as abundant. It does not find its expression in the Territorial forces, at any rate, which are manned, out of all proportion, by home-born Britons. Certain Canadians suffer from the gratifying belief that the Dominion saved the effete Empire in 1901, and are indignant when told that of the Canadian contingent sent to South Africa eighty per cent. were home countrymen. Nor does public spirit find much expression in local government, where the 'best people' are conspicuously absent—too busy making money to bother with such matters."

Without discussing the incident of 1901, The Citizen says by way of comment, the truth of the rest of the criticism must be confessed. Canadians have been so busy with the multifarious tasks of a new country that they have not had much time to devote to the interests of the country at large. But surely Canada has now advanced in development to such an extent that more attention can be given to the public interest. Unless such attention is given, no greatness of future can be safely predicted. That public spirit that makes a citizen think and feel and act for Canada, as for his larger self, is without doubt the great need of Canada to-day. Others recognize the fact, and Canadians cannot too soon follow their example, and profit by it.

Newly-laid Eggs

Bacteriologists tell us that in an egg [illegible] of bacteria are evident by the third or fourth day. There are some who believe that from that time on the egg is not perfectly "fresh," or "new-laid," nor any other name that should mean the best. It is [illegible] that if kept properly, but it is not of first quality, and all the statements to that effect cannot make it so. ACTORS RISK LIVES BEFORE THE CAMERA

Hair-raising Tricks Performed to Make Moving Pictures Really Sensational

Each big film-producing company includes amongst its artists a number of nerve-hardened players who are specially engaged to take huge risks in carrying out sensational exploits which add realism to spectacular moving pictures.

These men are mostly retired acrobats and circus riders. One of the most risky and consequently best paid occupations in the "movie" world is that pursued by a number of men who specialise in falling off galloping horses in spectacular Indian or war films. These artistes attempt feats that even the most hardened rough-rider would hesitate to perform.

Throwing themselves from the saddle when galloping in the midst of a horde of riders, they will lay perfectly motionless on the ground, although running a terrible risk of being trampled on by the hoofs of the other charging animals. Another well-known actor, who, in addition to possessing nerve and athletic skill, has his powers of timing well developed, earns a good deal of money through a sensational drop from an express train.

He utilises this performance in several ways. Sometimes he poses as an escaped convict who endeavors to escape the clutches of the law by a daring jump from an express. On other occasions he indulges in a struggle with another actor on the roof of a moving car, eventually being flung off the train into space.

The manner in which this player accomplishes with safety this daring leap is to fall into a lake that runs at the side of the railway track, for the train on which he does this trick always travels over the same piece of line.

When traveling on horseback over a narrow bridge, he gives a violent sideward spring, which carries him over the parapet of the bridge down to the stream below. This plucky actor has few rivals in the portrayal of this hair-raising deed, for should his spring not be well-judged he could easily sustain some serious injury by crashing up against the masonry of the bridge. This is a favorite trick of J. P. McGowan, who, by the way, used to be a dispatch rider for Lord Kitchener in South Africa.

OUR BODIES AND HEAT

We Drink Liquid That Would Scald Our Hands

The human body can stand far greater heat if it be dry than if it be wet, and, strangely enough, it can stand far hotter liquids inside than out. For example, the average tea-drinker sips tea at a temperature of about 140 degrees—sometimes as high as 145 degrees. But he cannot bear his hand in water at 130 degrees, or his feet in water higher than 112 degrees. Few people can stand a bath in water at 105 degrees.

In parts of Central Australia men live in an average temperature of 115 degrees in the shade and 140 degrees in the sun, while 151 degrees has been registered. In the Persian Gulf the thermometers on ships vary between 125 degrees and 140. An explorer in the Himalayas reports that he found in December, and at more than 10,000 feet altitude, a temperature of 121 degrees.

Drs. Blaydon and Chantrey, two English scientists, desiring to ascertain how high a temperature the human body could stand, shut themselves in an oven, of which the heat was gradually raised, and they were able to bear it until the thermometer registered 212 degrees, the boiling point of water.

Church for Women

Women in Liverpool, including many suffragettes, have inaugurated the novel plan of a church to be run by women. It will be called "The Church of the New Ideal." The preachers will be women. Men will be admitted to some of the services, but not all of them by any means.

Vinegar For Poaching Eggs

Into the boiling water used for poaching eggs, put one teaspoon of vinegar. Stir the water into circular motion, drop in eggs and you will find they are round in shape, and look inviting and well when taken out.

Another Site Proposed

In the evidence submitted to the Provincial Board of Health it was pointed out that for an additional expenditure of $20,000 the disposal plant could be erected across the river from the end of Park Street and if erected here would satisfy the residents of Otonabee. The spot selected at present is directly across the river from the end of Lock Street.

Admitted Thieves Remanded

At yesterday's police court Stanley Hartley and E. Lawrence pleaded guilty to a charge of [illegible]tral School and stealing $1.00. The same pair pleaded guilty to having broken into a George Street confectionery store and stealing a quantity of chocolates. County Crown Attorney Elliott asked for a week's remand as other charges may be made against the prisoners. They were remanded.

Let Out On Bail.

At yesterday's police court a local young man was charged with receiving goods stolen by Stanley Hartley. When asked "How do you elect to be tried? by me or by a jury?" The prisoner "Wherever I can get the most justice. I'll be tried by a jury." He pleaded not guilty. The prisoner was allowed out on $500 bail. The prisoner paid $1.25 for the bail bond which was signed by an East Ward capitalist. The prisoner admitted having bought the goods but claimed he did not know they were stolen.

Yesterday's Police Court

At yesterday's police court John McFarlane was charged with having been drunk as a blacklister. He was fined $10. McFarlane said he got his liquor from a one armed man in front of a local garage. He did not know the man's name. A young man named Fontaine pleaded guilty to a similar offense and was fined $10. He said he bought his liquor in Port Hope. A farmer named McKinley denied having been drunk. P. C. Reid said McKinley was so drunk he had to be carried into the station. $2.00. John McGuity was charged with having been drunk. The prisoner said he had a C.P.R. pass to Montreal. He was let go and advised to take the 11.25 train. Francis Hughes was charged with having been drunk on Sophia Street. LOCAL BREVITIES

Lindsay's annual Christmas Fair is to be held on Dec. 17th.

The local police are looking for two lads from Woodstock, Ont., charged with stealing $40.

Lindsay has, so far, taken in $1,000 in taxes. The heaviest ratepayer put up $1900.

Mr. Alan Munro left yesterday for Kingston. He has joined the engineering corps of the second contingent for overseas service.

At yesterday's police court the dock was crowded to overflowing. Brer Barleycorn seems to have broken an entrance through the line of defence.

The local merchants will consider it a favor if you do your Xmas shopping now. This gives both seller and buyer a chance.

The price of bottled ale has come down in Lindsay. This gives the moderate drinker a chance to beat John Barleycorn.

Mr. F.J. Daly's recently purchased racehorse "Grand Opera" with a record of 2.03½ will not come to Peterborough this winter. He will train for the various ice races, in Toronto.

The United counties of Durham and Northumberland will pay livery bills fr. Dr. Ivey who replaces Dr. Elliott of the Children's Shelter. The latter has gone to the war.

A popular local toast is 'Here's to the Peterboro boys in khaki at Salisbury Plains. May they black the Kaiser's eye and all get back safely!"

An evening contemporary of last night says "A number of small affairs have recently been given in honor of Miss ——" Now don't gentle reader, put a wrong construction on the above innocent remark!

Here's a "tip." If you want to put Xmas seals on envelopes, you post put them on the back. If they are placed on the front of the envelope, the letter will not be forwarded.

The man Prof. Ross, alias Bell, arrested here by detective Meagher for alleged fake sale of eye-glasses in Lindsay, was let go on suspended sentence at Cobourg.

The police of Lindsay are looking for a man named Paul Schlidt, who tried to promote a big company in that town. Schlidt does not seem to be in full possession of his faculties.

There has been a whole lot of gossip in this city about men being returned to Peterboro from Salisbury Plains. There is not a Peterboro-born man amongst those returned to Canada as unfit. Put this in your pipe and smoke it Mr. Kicker.

It seems that the poor man owning a house bought by frugal habits is not the only "kicker" against the present local assessment. Yesterday responsible merchants registered a vigorous protest. This town seems to have gone mad on expenditure, particularly on its pay list for needless civic employees. Still, the poor man pays whilst the civic employe pulls down his monthly cheque.

THE EASIEST WAY TO END DANDRUFF

Stop Falling Hair and Itching Scalp

There is one sure way that never fails to remove dandruff completely, and that is to dissolve it. This destroys it entirely. To do this just get about four ounces of plain, ordinary liquid arvon; apply it at night when retiring; use enough to moisten the scalp and rub in gently with the finger tips.

By morning most, if not all, of the dandruff will be gone, and three or four more applications will completely dissolve and entirely destroy every single sign and trace of it, no matter how much dandruff you may have.

You will find, too, that all itching and digging of the scalp will stop instantly, and your hair will be fluffy, lustrous, glossy, silky and soft, and look and feel a hundred times better.

If you want to keep your hair looking rich, do by all means get rid of dandruff, for nothing destroys the hair so quickly. It not only starves the hair and makes it fall out, but it makes it stringy, straggly, dull, dry, brittle and lifeless and everybody notices it. You can get liquid arvon at any drug store. It is inexpensive and four ounces is all you need. This simple remedy has never been known to fail.

OPERATIONS OF GERMANS IN WEST TAME

Geneva, Nov. 30.—During the last few days between Verdun and Belfort there have been serious encounters on the frontier with the soldiers fighting in several inches of snow. Numerous regiments on both sides have been supplied with skis for winter, but the Chasseurs Alpins, who are at home on skis, having climbed in peace times the Swiss and French Alps can easily outmanoeuvre the German Alpine regiments by their greater speed and knowledge of the snow laden forests.

Arras Now a Pile of Ruins.

London, Nov. 30.—H. Cozens Hardy telegraphs to The Daily News from Paris:—

"News arriving from Arthur Lasch from Arras today reports what means the the finally destructive bombardment of that unfortunate town. On Saturday fighting was renewed for the possession of a series of trenches, several German regiments hurling themselves upon the French positions. Both sides lost heavily, but both hung on with grim tenacity. As a result the French are still holding all of their positions, but Arras is nothing but a heap of ruins."

Germans Retiring

London, Dec. 1.—(Bulletin).—A despatch to the Central News from Dunkirk says the German front has begun a general retirement from the trenches east of Dixmude.

Violent Cannonading

Amsterdam, Holland, Dec. 1.— Violent cannonading has been recommenced along the Yser River and Canal, so violent that houses in the Dutch communes twenty miles away are shaken by the explosions. It is thought that German big guns recently brought up are now in action.

Lively Cannonading South of Ypres--Allies Make Progress in the Argonne District--German Artillery in Woevre District Without Result--Prisoners in England Riot and Their Guards Charged With Bayonets

Paris, Dec. 3.—The German attack along the coast has been resumed and brisk fighting is also in progress in the region south of Ypres.

The official communique today declares there was lively cannonading both at Nieuport and in the Ypres region yesterday. The Germans are also again being flooded out at Dixmude. The inundation by the opening of the dykes is now extending south of Dixmude, the communique states. The official statement also states: "There was lively cannonading from Nieuport to the south of Ypres. The inundation is now extending south of Dixmude. Aix Noulette was violently bombarded. Slight progress was made in the Argonne district where several attacks of the enemy were repulsed.

"From the Somme to the Aisne and in the Champagne district there is but little activity. The German artillery has been active in the Woevre region, but without results. In Lorraine and the Vosges there is nothing to report.

Attacked Their Guards

London, Dec. 3.—A thousand prisoners at the Lancaster internment camp attacked their guards to-day. They had obtained stones and sticks. The soldiers guarding the prisoners charged the rioters with fixed bayonets. Several were stabbed, but there were no fatalities.

Landed in Egypt.

London, Dec. 3.—Australian and New Zealand contingents, sent from these colonies for service, have disembarked in Egypt, the war bureau announced today. They will assist in the defence there, and after completing their training will go to the front.

De Wet, Leader of South African Rebels, May Suffer Death Penalty

Capetown, Dec. 3.—General Christian DeWet, Leader of the South African Rebels who is now a prisoner with other Leaders of the revolt against Britain will be court-martialled and probably shot.

Paris, Dec. 3.—Heavy cannonading by the Germans, with a vigorous reply by allies guns, marked the fighting in the region between Ypres and Arras to-day.

The allies continued to press their offensive south of Lens, but only slight progress is reported. Both the French and the British armies are now preparing for the new attempt of the Germans to drive their way through the strongly entrenched line to the coast.

Upwards of 600,000 Germans are declared to be on the front from the sea to Ypres. Heavy reinforcements are reported south of Ostend. During the last few days 100,000 German reinforcements are reported to have arrived. It is believed, however, that the apparent concentration on the western end of the line may prove to be a feint, and that the full force of the renewed attack may again fall within the Yser region.

Fresh troops of the second British army have relieved the French in this district in anticipation of a new drive.

Venice, Dec. 3.—The Archbishop of Przemysl, who is en route to Rome, is credited in an interview here with declaring that the situation of Przemysl is desperate and that the surrender of the fortress is imminent. The hospitals are crowded, according to a published statement; mortality is enormous, and the food supply almost exhausted.

London, Dec. 3.— King George of England, who has been visiting the British lines in Flanders went out to the firing lines today, according to a telephone message received this afternoon by the Evening News from Calais. The King has displayed the greatest interest in the British troops and has already visited the rear line of trenches.

LORD KITCHENER SAYS THE WAR WILL LAST FOR THREE YEARS

Result, Howeve, is Already Certain, as German's Western Campaign is Failure--Doubts Whether Germany Has Perfected Plans for an Invasion of England--War Can End Only in One Way

"It will take no less than three years to end this war," says Lord Kitchener in an interview which Irvin S. Cobb reports for the Saturday Evening Post. But he is confident of ultimate victory. "The German campaign in the west is a failure," he is quoted as saying; "it is a failure already, and it will become more and more a failure as time passes. When an army of invasion ceases to invade, that army has lost its principal function."

Going on to say that the German army has reached its maximum of strength and efficiency and aggressiveness, and "is now losing all these essentials," Kitchener adds that "to lie in that unending chain of trenches which stretches across Northern France for hundreds of miles like a long grey snake—that is not waging a successful campaign. . . . . Dropping bombs on cities is not waging war; it is a costly spectacular by-play which count for naught in the final result."

Kitchener doubts whether Germany has perfected plans for an invasion of England, but adds that England might be invaded and still the war would go on."

As to the duration of the war, the Minister said: "Not less than three years. It will end only when Germany is thoroughly defeated, not 'before—defeated on land and sea. That the allies will win is certain. That for us to win will require a minimum period of three years, I think probable. It might last longer, this war might. It might end sooner. It can end only in one way.

"That it will end in a month from now, or six months from now or six months, or a year, I do not think likely; so to be on the safe side I say three years—at least three years.

"If Germany gives up sooner, so much the better for Germany, for us, and for all the world. If three years are required, or more than three years, the world will find that, we for our part, are prepared to go on, and determined to go on, and certain to go on. In any event, this war can have but one outcome—one ultimate conclusion."

Kitchener waxes indignant over the military ethics which permit every soldier to become judge and execution of a civilian population, 'and says that while he encountered such a doctrine in the Soudan, "that enemy was a savage, so-called, and the Germans, as they themselve tell us, are the exclusive owners of the highest civilization the world has ever seen."

BELGIAN QUEEN INSPIRING--HER SAD BUT HEROIC FACE THRILLS BEHOLDERS

London, Dec. 3.—The correspondent of The Daily News Telegraphs from West Flanders:

"I have just witnessed one of the most pathetic, but at the same time inspiring home-comings of the war. It was the arrival on Belgian soil of the Queen of the Belgians, the beautiful consort of the noblest King the brave and indomitable people ever had had. The Queen, carrying in her beautiful features all the care which this devastating war has inflicted upon the Belgian people, came from England through France.

"When, dressed in black velvet and wearing a set of sable, she landed in France, the French and British military authorities rendered to her the fullest homage on the quay. She was received by French and Belgian officers and automobiles were in readiness to convey the royal party to the Belgian headquarters.

"Nothing I have seen in this awful struggle has made more of an impression than the womanly figure of the Queen, bravely facing toward Belgian soil and her devastated Belgian home."

TROUBLE IN CONCENTRATION CAMP

Thousand Prisoners Tried to Escape From the Lancaster Barracks

Lancaster, via London, Dec. 3.—An attempt to escape made last night by a thousand prisoners in the concentration camp here was thwarted by the guards who charged the mobs with fixed bayonets, wounding several.

The trouble arose from the indiscretion of a prisoner who boasted to the other captives that he was about to be released. This angered his comrades who attacked him. The guards intervened, but were overpowered.

The reserves were summoned, and when they reached the scene they found a thousand prisoners advancing armed with bricks, sticks and stones.

The reserves fixed bayonets, charged at the double quick, and soon subdued the mutineers. The ring leaders were arrested and placed in solitary confinement. Only one man was seriously injured in the melee.

PATRIOTIC PETERBOROUGH

Last night some 800 of the recently organized "Home Guard." held a march out headed by the bands of the 57th Regiment and the Salvation Army. Some 7000 people watched the local troops go by. One man, who hails from Virginia, U.S., and who is a member of the U.S. Naval Reserve, took off his hat as the National flag passed. He realized that Canada is at war. Three men 'clapped' their hands and two dogs showed they were alive by barking vociferously. One local rich man, recalled to a sense of what affected him, dug furiously into his pocket to search for a missing nickle. He remembered then he had spent the five cents in Jim saloon!

London, Dec. 3.—A despatch from Melbourne to Reuter's Telegram Company says: "The Royal Commission's report discounts the alarmist statements regarding the alleged operations of the American beef trust in Australia."

ZEEBRUGGE COMPLETELY WRECKED BY BOMBARDMENT OF ALLIED FLEET

New York, Dec. 3.—A special cable to The Herald, dated on the Belgian frontier, Wednesday, says—"The last naval bombardment of Zeebrugge resulted in the destruction of the electric plant which supplies power for the operation of the lock gates giving access to the maritime canal, with the result that the gates cannot be opened. The submarines remaining in the inner basin are now bottled up. The Germans are in a serious predicament unless they are able to manipulate the lock gates and Zeebrugge is useless. They must take their submarines piecemeal over land to Antwerp, and delay in this matter may be fatal to them.

PORTUGAL HAS FOUR EXPEDITIONS UNDER ARMS FOR WAR IN S. AFRICA

Lisbon, Dec. 3.—Portugal has now four expeditions under arms and a decree has been published providing for the mobilization of another division.

Premier Machado announced to-day that four expeditions were prepared for service in Africa where the Germans were threatening the Portuguese possessions of Angola.

The division to be mobilized will be ready for service anywhere it is needed and eventually will probably assist the British in the campaign against German African possessions.

Bombs at Krupp Factories

The Hague, Dec. 3.—All Berlin was excited today by the rumor today that a hostile aviator had succeeded in dropping bombs upon the Krupp factories yesterday. Some of the bombs are said to have been thrown upon the cannon shed, doing considerable damage. The aviator, whose nationality was not learned, escaped. It is thought he was British.

FUNERAL OF THE LATE MRS. ANDREW BRANDON

The funeral of the late Mrs. Andrew Brandon took place yesterday afternoon at 2.30 from the residence of her son, Mr. M. W. Brandon, Fenelon Falls. The obsequies were attended by a large gathering of relatives, friends and acquaintances; interment was made in Fenelon Falls' cemetery.

Deceased lady was all but a life-long resident of Fenelon Falls, having made her home there in the early years of her marriage, when she came from Ireland to this country with her husband, the late Mr. Andrew Brandon, by whom she was predeceased many years ago.

The late Mrs. Brandon is survived by two sons, Mr. J. H. and Mr. M. W. Brandon, both of Fenelon Falls, and one daughter, Mrs. W. H. Robertson, of this city. She was well known in Peterborough, having during her later years made many extended visits to her daughter, Mrs. W. H. Robertson. Deceased lady was an earnest and consistent member of the Presbyterian faith.

GERMANS HAVE DEFINITELY SUCCEEDED IN THROWING BACK ENVELOPING FORCES

London, Dec. 3.—For the first time since the Germans were checked in their advance on Warsaw, it was possible today to gain a fairly clear idea of the military situation in Russian Poland in its broader aspect. Advices from both Berlin and Petrograd indicated that the Germans had definitely succeeded in throwing back the enveloping Russian forces, and were maintaining stolidly their positions west of Lowicz. Furthermore, it is said, that the Germans are undertaking an energetic offensive.

The completeness of change in the situation, ascribed variously to the failure of the Russian General Rennenkampf, to close up the ring about the Germans and to the brilliant strategy of the German leaders, is indicated by a report telegraphed from Petrograd by an English correspondent, who previously had announced that the Russians had won an overwhelming victory. He now states that the Germans are holding their positions, and that the situation "remains extremely interesting and hazardous."

The latest official announcement from Petrograd states that the fighting has become less severe.

In Galicia the situation is still confused. Russian reports from Petrograd that the Russians had invested Cracow on three sides are now contradicted by an unofficial despatch, which says that the invaders are eight miles from the city.

The archbishop of Przemysl, the Galician stronghold which has been under siege for several weeks, is quoted as saying that the situation there is desperate and that the surrender of the city impends.

Berlin, via The Hague, Dec. 3.— It was officially stated today that the Russian attack north-west of Wolbrom was repulsed. The battles on the plains west of Nowa Radomsk and Lodz are developing favorably.

Literary Doctors

The fact that the celebrated American physician, Dr. Silas Weir Mitchell, who died recently at Philadelphia, had a distinct reputation in the literary world as a poet and novelist, calls to mind several other instances of relationship between pill and quill. Dr. Mitchell's best novel "Hugh Wynne, Free Quaker," created almost as much interest as some of the stories of Sir Arthur Conan Doyle, who got his ideas for "Sherlock Holmes" while walking the Edinburgh infirmary under the eye of that remarkable surgeon, Dr. Joseph Bell.

Another Scottish doctor, Dr. John Brown, was the immortal author of "Rab and His Friends." Ricardo Stephens, the author of "The Cruciform Mark" and "The Wooing of Grey Eyes," practises and writes in Brora, Sutherlandshire, in the heart of [illegible].

Sir Frederick Treves, who achieved the highest distinction as a surgeon, has since become one of the most widely read [illegible] of the day; while Sir Ronald Ross, who has done remarkable work in tropical diseases, has gained high repute for his writing on general scientific subjects.

Robert Bridges, the Poet Laureate, is a doctor; and among women doctors, Dr. Lillias Hamilton and Dr. Margaret Todd (Graham Travers) are both well-known writers of fiction.

HELPFUL HOME HINTS

Needles and pins will never rust in a cushion filled with coffee grounds. Rinse the grounds in cold water, spread on a sheet of paper to dry thoroughly, and then stuff the cushion.

In preparing lettuce for a salad dry by tossing lightly in an old napkin.

If the sugar and water one has boiled for frosting grains, a teaspoonful of butter added will make it smooth and creamy again.

If you wish to prevent green vegetables from boiling over, drop a piece of dripping the size of a walnut into the centre of them, just as they commence to boil.

When making a steamed pudding put a piece of well greased paper over the top before tying the cloth. This will prevent the cloths from becoming greasy and they are no trouble to wash.

There is nothing better to remove tar from white clothing than lard. Rub it well into the spot and then wash it out with soap and warm water.

When you find fruit stains on tablecloth or napkins wet with a little camphor. If this is done before the stain has been wet with water it will entirely disappear.

Keep the wax-coated boxes in which crackers are placed. They make excellent polishers for irons.

If grease is spilled on the kitchen floor, cover with layer of soda and cold water before scrubbing. The spot will be easily removed.

In scouring faucets great care should be taken not to force the scouring material into the joints, as the small particles cut away the screw threads in turning many times each day.

Impress upon the mind the sink waste pipe was installed for carrying off waste water—not vegetable peeling, bits of paper, burned matches or grease.

One or two asbestos mats should be in every kitchen to place under pans on the fire so as to prevent their contents cooking too fast.

If the oven bakes too rapidly on the bottom keep a sheet of asbestos size of oven. Place on bottom.

Embroidered Sode on Gown

There's a suggestion of fancy dress costume about this gown, of flowered taffetta. The blossoms are embroidered on the white silk in delicate green. The underskirt of chiffon is also embroidered in floral design, and the bodice is of transparent chiffon.

Tea Cakes

Cream one heaping tablespoon of butter with one cup of light brown sugar, beat in one egg, one cup of sour milk, into which stir one teaspoon of soda. One cup of raisins put into two cups of flour. Add milk and flour little at time, beat hard, put in muffin pans. Put chocolate marshmallow on top and bake twenty-five minutes in moderate oven.

Codfish Toast

Shred one cup of salt fish and soak over night. In the morning drain thoroughly. Put two cups of rich milk in double boiler, blend two tablespoons of flour with a little cold milk until perfectly smooth. Add to the milk in double boiler. Allow to cook fifteen minutes.

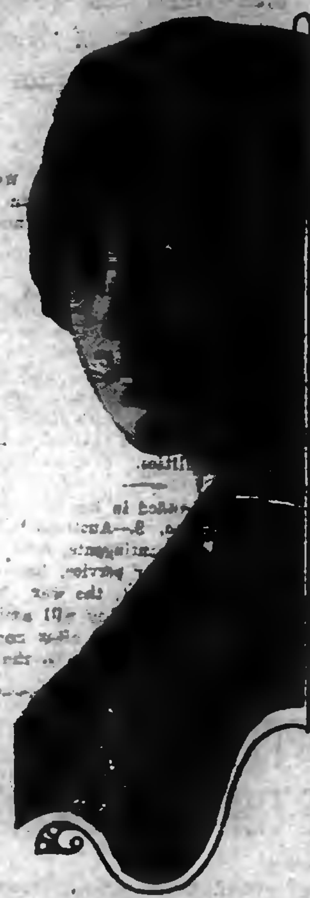
SPIRIT MESSAGES FROM WRECK VICTIM

Daughter of Famous Editor Perfectly Satisfied With the Genuineness of Communications She Receives

"If a man die, shall he live again?"

It was the question of Job, old as human thought and hope, the biggest question in all human experience. It was asked of Estelle Wilson Stead, daughter of the famous English editor, William T. Stead, whose brilliant life went out when the Titanic sank. Stead, himself, had believed in a spirit world. This wholesome, fair-haired, fresh-faced girl gave a startling definite answer.

"Yes," she said, "I have proof of immortality. Thinkers admit that evidence of only one soul surviving bodily death will prove the case. And I have that evidence!



MISS ESTELLE STEAD

"My father sends me personal messages that are absolutely convincing. I have even seen him, in a form more ethereal and beautiful than his earthly body. And I have talked with him face to face!

"Three weeks after he passed over," she continued, "the first message came. I was resting in the twilight, with my mind at ease. And suddenly I was conscious of father's voice.

"'All that I told you is true,' he said. 'I have entered into the fuller life. We are what we will to be. We have what we have faith in. And all things are possible.'

"He left me with a sense of infinite comfort and trust. He came again, often, and told me many things about his last hours and his present existence, some of which are hard to repeat.

"Father and I were always very close. The bond between our minds made telepathic communication between us common during his life. what is more natural than that his thought should reach me afterward?

"Now, consider these two facts: First, I never got such a message except when I am in sound health. Recently I was ill, as a result of overwork on my books. During that illness I got no messages. There is nothing morbid or pathological about my experiences.

"Second, the messages are their own proof. Father speaks of things that nobody knows except us two. You say that might possibly be self-suggestion—my subconscious mind at work—but the new facts that father adds to the old, things that I could not possibly have known until he told me, clinch the proof."

Sanitary Sugar Bowl

Sanitary reasons prompted the invention of a new sugar receptacle which delivers a small portion of its contents through a spout as a valve is opened by a lever attached to its handle.

Airiness Is the Style Note in Summer Gowns

By Madge Marvel

[redacted]

AIRINESS is the keynote of the summer fashions. To the casual observer it might seem... [illegible] ...the problem of ... but the mid-summer gowns have apparently solved the problem with remarkable skill. They have the gossamer effect on a foundation which is genuinely substantial, and, though not apparent, still combines to give the wearer the satisfaction of knowing her gown is not the perishable thing it appears.

The net linings upon which nearly all bodices are made is quite as lasting as the firmer and clumsier cambric of other days. Then, too, ruffles which always create so delightfully airy are really the most lasting trimming one can employ on thin dresses.

In addition to their airiness there is a certain simplicity about the summer frocks which is attractive. It is partly a reaction, partly a result of the trend toward youthfulness which is still the strong motif in the style world.

Laces for Service.

The shops are filled with chiffon, crepes, batistes, dotted Swiss, organdies and those various fabrics which, for want of better identification, are grouped under the name of muslins.

Even the laces which are offered in wonderful variety and at prices in range of the average purse, are intended to give service.

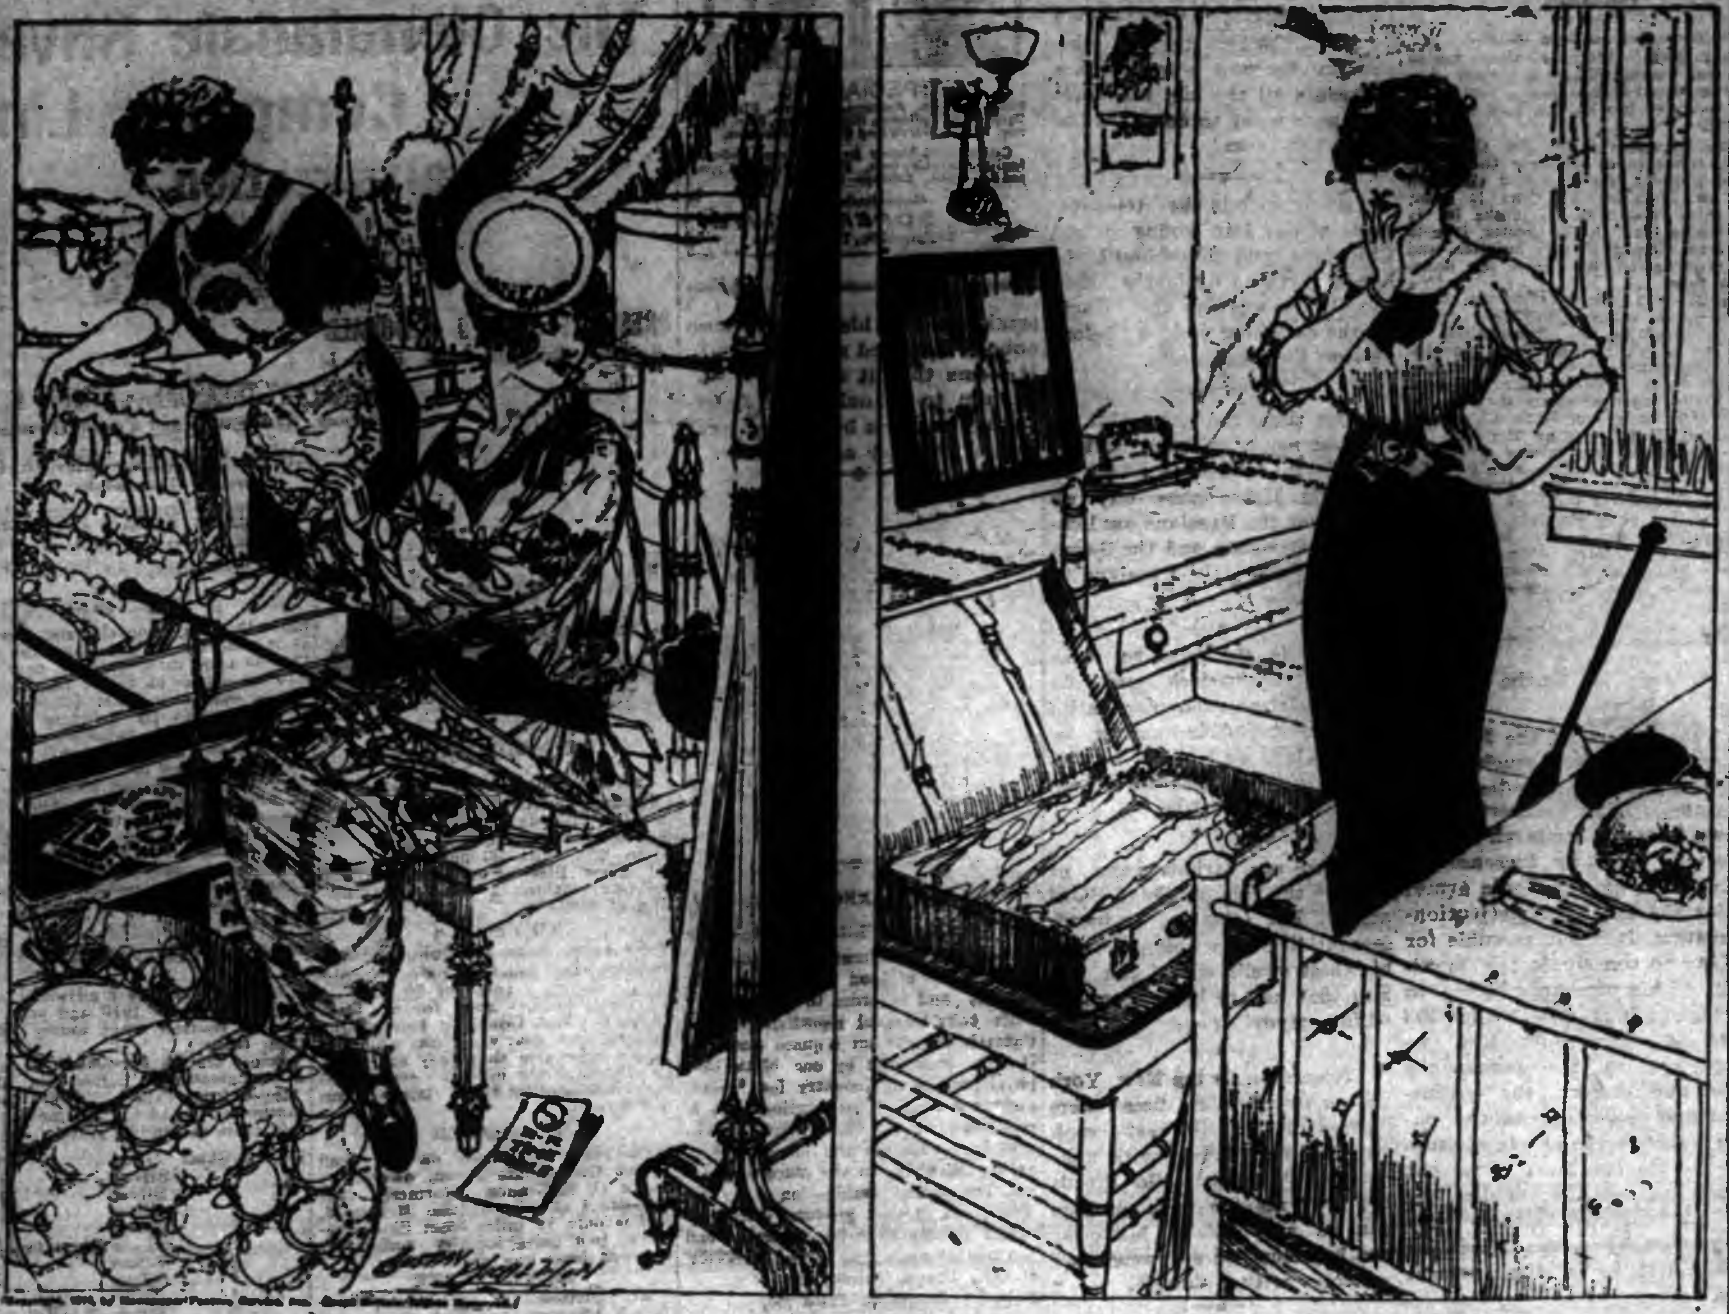
TWO VACATIONS

By Michelson



Copyright, 1916, by Newspaper Feature Service, Inc. [illegible]

OH, YES! they are very different. Look at the two pictures. One girl has a solicitous maid who is trying to get the last of the long list of fluffy luxuries of clothes into the last of the trunks. Men will carry the trunks away. A chauffeur will see that Miss Rich is taken to her seat in the Pullman.

The other girl has just that one suitcase. No one to help her pack—it isn't necessary. She will carry the suitcase herself. And she will find her own seat in the day coach. But the greatest difference in these vacations doesn't show in the pictures. One girl is going on a four months' round of the "summer places." The other is going away for a week. One doesn't have to think about what it costs. The other has to count every cent.

Yet you can't be sure which will have the BEST TIME. In this funny world it sometimes happens that the Cinderella meets the Prince. And there are better things than princes—or money.

Secrets of Health

How Wrinkles on Your Face Can Be Erased

By Dr. Leonard Keene Hirshberg

A. B., M. A., M. D. (Johns Hopkins).

[redacted]

DR. HIRSHBERG

NOTWITHSTANDING the well-nigh universal objection to crow's feet and frowns, wrinkles are by no means the upshot of age, passing years and premature senility. On the contrary, there are more persons who die above middle life, free of these fleshy rivulets, gullies, brooklets, ravines and bridle paths than with them.

However, no pill or powder within, no plaster, salve or liniment on the outside will ever be able to remove wrinkles. Just as all the king's horses and all the king's men could not put Humpty Dumpty together again, so all medicaments and herbs are powerless to fill up the fleshy, aching voids.

Yet much may be done to eliminate these dots and dashes, radiations and star-like lines from the forehead, eyes, cheeks, chin and face. Like all deformities and physical disorders, a scruple of prevention is worth a drachm of cure.

Defects of vision, cross eyes, short-sightedness, foresightedness, eye strain, muscular tension are a few of the sources of the fleshy flounces of the forehead and cheeks.

Plainly, many of the dermal flutings near the optical orbits can be avoided by the proper use of correct lenses.

Moreover, blemishes of one sort and another, a fat face gone thin, boils, scars, pimples, large pores, blackheads and swellings of the flesh are all causes of fissures and creases.

The phrase, "Here's another new wrinkle," has its origin in the ancient ejaculation which shows that wrinkles were never a popular situation. Clean habits, pure thoughts, lots of rest, plentiful food, fresh air, moderate activity in the open, bathing, sunlight and massage—which may be done with the bare fingers, olive oil, vaseline, or any lubricant—to fatten up the underlying muscles, all tend to postpone the day as well as to reduce the number of these facial ruts and grooves.

Answers to Health Questions

G. R. R. S.—Am troubled with red, burning face at all times, blotches on same. Also get large pimples on face and over shoulders which look like boils. They sometimes stay for a week and then disappear without any discharge. Am a young man of 23, work outside, get plenty of exercise and good food. I feel ashamed every place I go on account of this trouble, as I am a person of good habits.

Reduce all hot food. Keep in the air. Massage the red spots with ammoniated mercury ointment at night. Also take a tablespoonful in wineglass of water.

[illegible]

Dr. Hirshberg will answer questions for readers of this paper on medical, hygienic and sanitation subjects that are of general interest. He will not undertake to prescribe or offer advice for individual cases. Where the subject is not of general interest letters will be answered personally if a stamped and addressed envelope is enclosed. Address all inquiries to Dr. L. K. Hirshberg, care this office.

Live Simply to Acquire True Beauty

By LUCREZIA BORI

Prima Donna of the Metropolitan Opera Company, New York.

Special arrangements have been made with Senorita Lucrezia Bori, the famous prima donna soprano, who has created a wonderful impression in Europe and New York on account of her remarkable beauty and artistic attainments, to write for this paper a series of articles on beauty. There is probably no authority her equal in giving the newest and most approved methods of attaining and preserving the divine right of women.

LUCREZIA BORI

IN an American home where I was a recent guest I was delighted by the charming simplicity of existence. My host was a very rich man. His beautiful wife is one of the most popular hostesses in what is known as "society." Their home is spacious and furnished with most exquisite [illegible]

[illegible]

"We are so anxious to keep our youth and our figures that we cannot be too indulgent in the way of eating or drinking or dissipation. Why, if many of the average girls who think we live in luxurious ease knew how hard we work to keep in thorough condition they would be amazed."

This woman, I am told, is typical of many of her rank and station all over the country. The matrons of today are superbly healthy and handsome and delightfully fascinating. They have learned how to live. I asked this woman for beauty secrets. She gave me [illegible]

Eat plain food moderately. [illegible]

guests are drinking only table waters, and no comment is made. It is not considered eccentric to refuse wine.

Exercise mentally and physically, and do it at the same time. She explained that the mind should be centred on the bodily exercise in order to make it effective. It is good form to be tremendously interested in whatever one is doing. It is "so vital!"

Sleep enough to rest the mind and body and nerves and no more. When you awaken arise and start the day with enthusiasm. Keep enthusiastic. All youth has enthusiasm. Cultivate it to ward off age.

Keep your temper. Loss of it signifies lack of poise. Poise is an essential. Bury the hatchet. By this she explained that the new beauty culturists do not allow those who would be beautiful to cherish resentment.

Keep out of doors all you can.

Have a hobby—but be merciful to it.

Believe in yourself, your neighbor and your work.

And when I asked her about what to do for the complexion she laughed carelessly and said: "Why, really, I have so few secrets of that kind. I simply use some good, pure cream and powder, a little rouge if I need it in the evening, and once in awhile I have some electric treatment. My maid brushes my hair a great deal, and I brush it, too. There is nothing in the world so good for the hair as brushing.

"As for your figure, you won't have to do anything for it if you live right."

Lucrezia Bori

Points on Palmistry

Smooth, conical fingers are a sign of talkativeness and levity.

Strong, knotted fingers show prudence and capacity.

A palm too slim, narrow, and feeble indicates instinct without capacity.

If the palm is too large, the person is coarse and animal-like.

If the outer joint of the fingers forms a knot, the person has well-arranged ideas.

The individual who has knots at the middle joints of the fingers always has a place for everything and everything in its place.

Intellect belongs to knotted fingers, grace to smooth ones.

The person whose fingers are smooth and pointed is guided wholly by inspiration, and never has a reason for what he does.

The Good Night Story

The Wise Farmer's Master—By Vernon Henry

ONCE upon a time, in a far distant land, there lived a farmer who had a beautiful daughter. All the young men in the countryside wished to wed with her, but their suitors failed to be able to satisfy her father.

[illegible]

"Work for me until the cuckoo sings. If you are not satisfied I shall cut off the tip of your ear. If I am not satisfied you can cut off the tip of mine. If we are both satisfied, you can wed my daughter."

Many young men agreed to this, but each, after a short time, left the farm with the tip of his ear cut off.

One day there appeared a young man by the name of Orlando. The bargain made, he went to work in the fields.

When he was not invited to dinner he said nothing, but helped himself to a meal. The farmer's wife told her husband, who began to avoid Orlando.

"Are you not satisfied?" asked the young man. The farmer felt of his ear and replied that he was. After that Orlando was always asked to supper.

[illegible]

"Yes," asked the farmer, who went to seek his daughter's advice about getting rid of the terrible servant.

"I'll hide in a bush and imitate a cuckoo," she said; "then you can tell him the contract is ended."

This she did, but Orlando refused to believe his ears, and, looking in the bushes, saw the daughter.

"Oh, I am fooled!" cried the farmer.

"Then I shall cut off your ear," said Orlando.

"Will you take my hand instead of my father's ear?" asked the daughter.

"Yes," said the young man. And he and the farmer shook hands.

There was a fine wedding soon, and the young people lived together happily for many years.

AN AMERICAN OPINION

(Boston Herald)

The British navy, like our own, has had slight experiences in accidental explosions of magazines of modern battleships. If the tragedy off Sheerness was due to the careless handling of ammunition it is an exceptional, indeed an extraordinary, case in the British service. But extraordinary things do happen especially in the stress of war, and the theory of accident which the British Admiralty endorses will be accepted unless investigation proves the contrary.

But there is a possibility, and not a remote one, that the fatal damage was wrought by an adventurous German submarine, the twin of the daring craft that only a few days ago blew up a gunboat off Deal, not far away. The time was the chosen one for such an attack—early in the morning—and German submarines have repeatedly been sighted of late in the English channel — indeed only the other day one of them coolly sank a small Cunarder near the French port of Havre. And still more recently the collier Khartoum was blown up by a mine off Grimsby.

If the terribly sudden and complete destruction of the Bulwark was due to a submarine, the torpedo must have struck right against one of the ship's main magazines and exploded at once. No torpedo could of itself cause such swift annihilation of a great ship of 15,000 tons, which only a few years ago was a famous flagship and the pride of the British navy. The general location of magazines in a modern armorclad is known to an intelligent enemy. It is a target preferred even to the vulnerable boiler and engine compartments. If a submarine dealt the blow and escaped the fact will forthwith be known to the German Admirals. But it may not be given out—for although it may bring exultation to the one side, it brings warning to the other.

THE KING'S VISIT

The presence at the front in Europe of His Majesty King George is symbolical in exhibiting to the British Empire the fact that its highest interests are at stake in the European war. Already the Emperor of Russia, the President of France, and the Emperor of Germany have visited their troops in the field, and it is entirely in harmony with the feelings of Britons the world over that their ruler should appear also among his troops, adding the inspiration of his presence to the enthusiasm of his army.

The presence of the King at the front will mean much to the soldiers. The heroic ruler of the Belgians, King Albert, has shown how the monarch's influence may work to increase the forcefulness of a nation's army. Under the British constitutional system, it is not possible for a King to contribute the maximum of his personal force to cause, but it is possible for the King to carry with him, to symbolize in his person, the hopes and desires, the enthusiasm and confidence, of the nation Not for hundreds of years has the English King gone out to his army in the field; but not for centuries, either, has the national heritage been at stake as it is in the present war.

There is in human nature a mysterious response to the appeal of Royalty. In the British system, Royalty is the key-stone of the state. The going of King George to the front is the best possible evidence before the world that the British people are committed to this struggle until the last blow is struck. The British army in the field deserves the compliment, which could not be better paid, than in the visit of His Majesty the King, and the British people at home could not desire a better exemplification of the national interest and enthusiasm for the cause at arms than His Majesty's visit gives.

INTRODUCTION

The Glenaladale Silver Black Fox Company, Limited, was incorporated in 1913 with six pairs of foxes, at $60,000. This Company re-capitalized in 1914, with 20 pairs of beautiful Silver Black Foxes, at $15,000 per pair, making a total capitalization of $300,000.

THE FOXES

Six pairs (one year old) proven breeders, and fourteen pairs (1914 pups), making a total of 20 pairs — all young foxes— good for at least 10 years. This Company has bought some of this year's options on foxes with a guarantee that they are pedigreed and of the highest strain and very best quality P. E. Island famous foxes.

THE RANCH

The ranch is situated on the well known Glenaladale Farm, owned by Major C. McKinnon, formerly the homestead of Sir William McDonald, and is only 12 miles from Charlottetown, in a quiet locality sufficiently removed from any disturbance.

THE RANCHER

Mr. Arthur V. McKinnon, our Ranch Manager, has had much experience in breeding foxes, and has the practical knowledge necessary to efficiently manage and care for the animals.

The foxes will be ranched free of charge to the Company for the first year. This means a large saving to the shareholders, as some companies have to pay as high as 25 per cent. of the increase for ranching purposes.

The promoters of this Company are retaining $[illegible] worth of stock for themselves. $[illegible] worth has already been disposed of, leaving $[illegible] to be offered to investors at $25.00 per share, with a guarantee that a dividend of 50 per cent. will be paid in cash in 1915, or whatever more it may be.

The Glenaladale Silver Black Fox Co., Limited, in 1913 guaranteed a dividend of 50 per cent. but are going to pay 50 per cent. in cash and 50 per cent., in stock in 1914. The Company is in good standing and to each and every investor the first of September, 1914, we can say— "We have given you 50 per cent. more than we promised." And we feel sure that in 1915 all the shareholders in this re-capitalized company will be able to say they received more than they were promised.

This Company can truthfully say that they have not one cent of watered stock in the Company. Now Mr. Investor, if you were a Company and we the shareholders, we would look to you for justice to give us all that was honestly due us. We would not like for you to buy 3 pairs of foxes at $15,000 per pair ($45,000) and form a fox company and capitalize your concern at $[illegible] and make us pay, as shareholders, for it. The Glenaladale Silver Black Fox Company, Limited, will ask you to do nothing like that. We want to let you in on the ground floor.

NOTICE

When a fox company guarantees any specified dividend to its shareholders, and when said company is an incorporated body, you need not be afraid of any unfair play, for such company is compelled to pay what they promise, and, besides, every interest is taken for the welfare of both the investor and the company.

The promoters of this Company are all above board and will not permit any crook to come in and do anything that is not right. Anyone holding stock in this Company who is dissatisfied can, by notifying the Secretary-Treasurer, have his or her money promptly refunded.

FORTUNES IN FOXES

There is money in fox ranching more than anything else ever known. It is good for the rich man and good for the poor man. A poor man cannot buy a pair of Silver Black Foxes but he can easily raise $25.00, $50.00 or $100.00. By investing in this Company he gets back his money in at least two years and then he will have an income for life and for his children to come—and after there will be money in fox farming. One of the reasons for this is that P. E. Island has now 95 per cent. of the world's foxes in captivity. For every one pelt that can be raised there are more than 25 wealthy people waiting for it in London, Russia, France and America.

PELT VALUES

The Fox Pelts have advanced greatly in price since 1910 and you can see for yourself what money was in them then.

Below are the particulars of sale of a consignment of Silver Fox Furs, shipped from Prince Edward Island ranches to London, England, and sold there in March, 1910:

All cheques must be made payable to "The Glenaladale Silver Black Fox Co., Ltd."

A POINTER

Just to give you a little idea of what the free ranching of foxes means to the investor, we will figure it out for you.

We have twenty pairs of foxes in the ranch and suppose each pair produces a litter of only four pups this is equal to 40 pairs and at $15,000 per year it would figure out at $600,000. Now, if we had to pay even 15 per cent. of the increase for ranching purposes (which is considerably lower than some companies pay) it would mean that we would have to pay $90,000 for ranching expenses.

We ranch the foxes free for the first year, so that in addition to a guaranteed dividend of 50 per cent., we save you this large outlay of money. While we guarantee 50 per cent., still should each pair in our ranch produce four pups it would mean that your dividend would be about 200 per cent. instead of 50 per cent.

FINAL WORD

A great deal has been written about Ranches, Grades of Foxes, etc., but after all the one object that every investor should keep before him is the dividend he is going to get. We have tried to show you in plain English what we can do for you and now that you have our proposition, compare it with the offer made by any other company now in business— and then judge for yourself, to have been paid by some of the Charlottetown daily newspapers.

PUNISHING INVADING GERMANS

Petrograd, Dec. 2.—It is now admitted that in the vicinity of Lodz and Lowicz, the Germans have succeeded in cutting their way out of the trap which had been laid for them. This was accomplished however with terrific losses.

Bayonets and Fists.

The bloodiest battle of the fighting in Poland to date is said to have been last Friday. Throughout that day the Siberian corps stormed the German trenches in the Lodz region. The Russians charged and carried the fighting directly to the German lines. The enemy offered terrific resistance. Ammunition was cast aside and the two forces fought bayonet to bayonet or clubbed each other with the butts of their rifles. Many resorted to bare fists before giving up. Not a single German was left alive when the Russians finally came into undisputed possession of the works. The Russian troops were soaked with blood, which froze to their [illegible].

Control the Vistula.

By holding Plock the Russians control the Vistula, which has been serving as an important line of communication for the Germans, it is declared here. Several barges loaded with supplies and ammunition have already been captured. The Russian troops are said to be withstanding the hardships of the winter campaigning much better than the Germans. All the prisoners captured declare they have endured terrible suffering. Many have frosted or frozen feet and hands. Supply trains have been wrecked and there is a shortage of warm clothing for the army.

EGYPTIANS WOULD LIKE KITCHENER BACK

London, Dec. 2.—The Cairo correspondent of The Daily Telegraph cables an interview given to him by Rushdi Pasha on the advantages of British rule in Egypt.

"England is the natural protector of Egypt on many grounds," said the Prime Minister. "Her pre-eminence in Egypt assures for her that the great highwayt o the east will be kept open. Her control safeguards the European financial interests in Egypt, and to us it means the integrity of our territory

Appreciate England's Work.

"An enormous majority of Egyptians appreciate Great Britain's work and on every ground would greatly regret a break in England's interest in the country. We shall have more hope of realizing our ambitions to become an important state if we work under England's guidance. No other power could help us in the same way."

Rushdi Pasha spoke in warm terms of Lord Kitchener's work in Egypt and expressed the hope that when the British Secretary of War's task in England is finished he will return.

Praise For Kitchener.

"The Egyptians would be most happy to have Lord Kitchener back," he added. "One doesn't expect great soldiers to be statesmen, but Lord Kitchener has proved himself, by his clear sighted policy in Egypt, to be a statesman of the first rank."

IMMIGRATION CAMPAIGN IS DROPPED

Ottawa, Dec. 2.—No less than 23 officials of the Immigration Department in Great Britain have enlisted in Lord Kitchener's new army. Word to this effect has been received by Hon Dr. Roche from J. Obed Smith, Commissioner of Immigration for the United Kingdom. Their positions have been held open for them if they survive the war.

The immigration campaign in Great Britain for the time being has been dropped. It is felt that it would be unpatriotic to do otherwise. However the sending of Canada's contingent across the Atlantic has drawn attention to the Dominion as never before and it is expected that when hostilities cease the tide of immigration towards Canada will be greater than ever.

The thousands of men in the army who have been drawn away from a sedentary life will be inclined, it is felt, to seek a new home in Canada rather than return to their offices and factories.

THE FOUR SIGNALS

Some Practical Knowledge Simply Stated For the Emergency Nurse

Pulse, heart, temperature, and breathing; these are the four signals, and if you were asked, in a press of work, to take charge of a wounded or sick person until a trained nurse could arrive you would be useless almost without a knowledge of the four danger signals.

The pulse is due to a momentary distension of an artery, caused by the contraction of the left ventricle of the heart. "Feeling the pulse" is therefore to know the strength, regularity and rate of the heart's action.

In health, for an adult man, the pulse rate is about 72 per minute (sitting), 80 (standing), down to 65 (reclining. So a pulse rate of 65-80 is within the range of health. Women have, generally, a quicker pulse than men, and a tall man a quicker pulse than a short man. In illness the pulse either slows, as in injuries, compression of the brain, etc., or quickens, as in fevers.

To take the pulse at the wrist use your right hand to feel the left pulse, or vice versa. Place three fingers (the fore, the middle, and the ring) of the right hand on the artery about half an inch from the outer, or thumb, side of the patient's forearm, and with the central of the three fingers one inch above the front of the wrist: at the same time placing the thumb of the hand behind the forearm, so as to support it.

Hold a watch, with a second-hand, in your free hand, and count the pulse rate for a minute, noting at the same time any intermissions or irregularities.

To take the temperature needs care. A mistake would mislead the doctor.

In health the temperature follows a well defined course through the day. From 4-6 a.m. it is at its lowest, about 97.5. As the morning advances the temperature rises to the normal of 98.4. After noon and towards evening in healthy persons it may rise a little further above the normal, and then gradually decline again.

The temperature may be taken in the mouth by placing the bulb beneath one side of the tongue. The patient's lips must be closed, and he must breathe through his nose, and neither open his mouth to speak or breathe whilst the temperature is being taken. Unless the thermometer is marked "half minute" or "one minute," etc., it must be kept in place for four minutes at least. If there are difficulties in taking a mouth tempera-

AVERAGE MILK YIELDS

Could be Greatly Increased by Proper Testing of Cows

A common question in the country is, "How are the cows doing?" What a volume of thought that suggests! If they are doing well is it because of good feed and careful attention, or may it be despite the feed and care they deserve, but do not get? Leaving aside the questions of weather, breed, heredity and persistency of flow of milk, is it possible to account for the remarkable differences in yield that are to be found? For instance, the dairy division at Ottawa found in one locality 100 cows that gave 3,000 pounds of fat in one month, but 100 cows close by in the same county gave only 2,500 pounds of fat. Another lot of 100 cows in a nearby county gave only 2,300 pounds.

Is the ordinary herd keyed up to the pitch of creditable performance, or is it just jogging along in the old rut of "average yields?" Suppose the farmer ascertains his herd is doing "about as well" as his neighbor's, does it not seem a great pity that his ambition should end there?

Cow testing has helped many communities to far larger dairying business, because it shows that scores of cows and average herds can be made to produce far more than they do at present. Make each cow pay a good profit.

Mutton or Lamb Pie

Cook two pounds of mutton or lamb in little water until all meat slips from bones. Salt after cooking. Place meat in pudding dish. Measure broth, and to each cup add one cup of milk. Blend a heaping tablespoon of flour for each cup of liquid; boil and turn over meat in dish. Season to taste. An Appeal to the Intelligent Investor !

Does a logical [illegible] of a good investment interest you? Do you believe there is an oil in commercial quantities in Alberta? If you are alive to the situation you do. Then it will pay you to investigate our proposition and our holdings.

Please Read Carefully and Note!

THAT Oil authorities are agreed the Alberta Oil Field is of an anticlinal formation. It has been fairly accurately ascertained in what general direction these anticlines run. Geologist B. W. Dunn chose wisely in the selection of the now famous Monarch well. WINDSOR OILFIELDS, LIMITED, has holdings located close to the Monarch.

THAT Cunningham Craig, one of the world's most eminent geologists, selected the site of the Mowbray-Berkeley well. Stock in that company is not offered at any price. We possess acreage adjoining the Mowbray-Berkeley (Section 12, Township 28, Range 5, West of 5th). If a strike is made at the Mowbray-Berkeley what will shares in our company be worth?

RECORD GOLF DRIVE

Over Half a Mile With Frozen River as Green

Robert Jolly, better known as "Wee Robbie," one of the younger members of the famous St. Andrews Jollys, all of whom are now golf professionals in the United States, established what he claims is the record drive of a golf ball. The feat was a drive of 1,000 yards, and the drive was made under conditions which were as unusual as the drive itself.

"WEE ROBBIE" JOLLY

Early last winter, after the weather had driven almost all the golfers off the links of the Park Ridge Country Club, a lawyer continued to play over the frozen ground. He experimented. Discovering that the cold golf ball could not be driven as far as he ordinarily drove in summer, he warmed them by a stove before starting out and carried them inside his clothing, finding that the warm balls striking on the frozen ground would bound and roll fully fifty yards per drive further than cold ones.

Then, without revealing his secret, he bantered Robbie Jolly into wagering that he could not drive 350 yards. On the frozen ground and with a heated ball the feat proved easy, and the joke was on the professional.

With his Scotch aroused, Jolly remarked that, under proper conditions he could drive 1,000 yards. It seemed impossible, and the wager was made. Then the Des Plaines river [illegible] and presented a perfect sheet of ice [illegible] and hard. Jolly notified the [illegible] that he was ready for [illegible] and took them to the river. He teed off a ball warmed to 105 degrees, and, save for a slight bend, the "fair green" was a sheet of ice without obstacles for two miles. The first drive struck the bank about 600 yards away. The second went past the only hazard, the jutting bank at the curve, and, bounding along forty yards to the bound, whizzed down the middle of the river. The judge stationed at the 1,000-yard mark said it was still going strong when it passed him, but bounded, struck an over-hanging willow limb and, after rolling a few yards further, rolled down a slope in the ice against the bank, where it was found.

THE PACKING OF APPLES

British Importers Favor Boxes Rather Than Barrels For Finer Grades

Interviews with British apple importers on the subject of packing in boxes or barrels indicate that the package is becoming a more important factor in trade than formerly, says a report issued by the Canadian Department of Trade and Commerce. "Which is the better package" cannot just be answered categorically. One class of package suits one trade, while another class of package is looked for by a different trade, a good deal depends on what trade is being catered for. There are certain varieties of apples more suitable for the box trade, and others more suitable for barrels. Apples of coarse texture, and whose appearance, so far as color is concerned, is not so good, can very readily be packed in barrels, while the apple with good appearance, whose texture is finer, and more suitable for dessert, can be packed in boxes. It will pay to do so, even at the extra cost of the box, packing and freight.

THIS MAN PROVES INSANITY CURABLE

Once Undoubtedly Crazy, C. W. Beers Declares Afflicted Mind Retains Consciousness of Surroundings

When an insane man enters the shadows of an asylum and the door of his cell clangs shut, is all hope gone?

"No!" says Clifford W. Beers, and proves it by his own experience.

Beers, a Yale graduate, was crazy—absolutely stark, raving crazy. There can be no question about it. For nearly three years he was an inmate of hospitals for the insane. A large part of that time he seemed as hopeless as any maniac who ever wore a straight jacket in the padded cell of a "violent" ward. For many months his mind was so shattered that his mere physical life was despaired of.

Now Beers is a scientist of wide repute, the author of admitted masterpieces of narrative, analysis and logic, a man whose mental power and poise compel respect—a healthy, sane, useful member of society.

Beers came strikingly into public notice at a congress on school hygiene at Buffalo, where he appeared as secretary of the national committee on mental hygiene—an organization which he founded and of which he is the moving spirit.

A large part of the improved treatment of insanity of late years is the result of Beers' effort, and particularly of his book—probably the most remarkable work on insanity ever written.

"A Mind That Found Itself" is the autobiography of an insane man. It was written after his recovery, when every detail of his appalling experience was fresh in his mind. It related, for the first time in history, the inner life of a darkened soul, telling of the storms that swept through it and of the Self that shook and [illegible], but remained conscious through all. The insane person is not a brute; his human self survives; he knows what is going on around him; he judges those who deal with him, and he is melted by kindness or enraged by injustice. The judgment, to be sure, is warped. There were times when Beers' own melancholia made all mankind seem his enemies and when he had "delusions of grandeur" that made all things appear possible. He was sunk in apathy or aroused to incessant speech. He committed countless absurdities and even acts of violence because at the time they seemed reasonable to him.

CLIFFORD W. BEERS

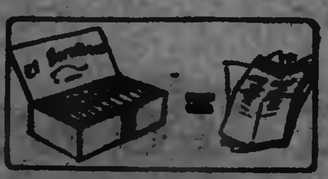
But all the time he knew what he was doing. And kindness, patience, good air and nourishing food made him better, and brutality and hardship made him worse, and he knew it.

He is devoting his life now to teaching doctors and asylum officials what he learned, and helping other patients with sick minds to get well by an easier process than he did.

They Are Even Now

An enterprising cigar dealer sent a doctor a box of cigars, which had not been ordered, together with a bill for $5.00. The accompanying letter stated that:

"I have ventured to send these on my own initiative, being convinced that you will appreciate their exquisite flavor."



In due course the doctor replied: "You have not asked me for a prescription, but I venture to send you one [illegible], being convinced that you will be quite as satisfied with them as I am with your cigars. As my charge for a prescription is $5.00, [illegible]."

THE RIGHT WAY TO STRIKE A MATCH.

Once in a while we have complaints about our matches breaking in two. This is no fault of the Match, as EDDY'S MATCHES are made from specially selected straight-grained wood only. For the benefit of those who are still in ignorance of the proper way to hold a match (and there are many) we give the following rule:—

"The forefinger of the right hand should be placed over the tip of the match and withdrawn quickly when the flame comes. This prevents any undue leverage on the match, and instinct prevents one getting one's finger burned."

Clean pots and pans with
GOLD DUST

Germs of decay accumulate on oft-used pots and pans, and ordinary soap and water only clean off the surface.

Gold Dust does the work—and does it right. It digs deep after germs, cleans like a new whistle and leaves your pots and pans as new, as bright as the day they were new—and sanitarily safe.

Gold Dust does this work in just half the time required by soap or any other cleanser. Does it better, too.

Gold Dust cleans everything. [illegible]

CRICKET IN ENGLAND

Some Sarcastic Comment by a Lover of Amateur Sport

When I come across a [illegible] was describ[illegible] the glorious game of cricket, [illegible] George Robey, [illegible] "Anathema," [illegible] warlike spirit of my [illegible] forefathers inspires me, and I want to say this:

I don't say that first class cricket is all ideal game from the spectator's point of view; but, after all, it was fashioned for the players, not for idle onlookers, and I don't think I have met a practical player who had anything to say against the present condition of the game.

But, of course, if it is necessary that cricket be brought up or down to the business level of Association football; that the gentlemen and sportsmen who govern the game are to throw aside the old traditions and become keen seekers of dividends; and that "gates" are to be secured at any price, then the game must be forced upon the public.

First of all, the game must be discouraged at our schools and on our open spaces, because, once cricket is learned by the younger generation and "the seed is sown," I know of nothing which will turn a player into a spectator, and so secure gates.

But, before doing this, we must, at least, provide sport worthy of good patronage. Three-day matches are long-drawn-out affairs, and only made necessary by the fact that skill is opposed to skill. But if big "gates" are necessary, science is not wanted; the enjoyment of those who actually play is a something unworthy of consideration.

Excitement must dominate cricket completely, and so it will be necessary to curtail the time [illegible] on a [illegible], and crowd into, say, two hours, an international game, [illegible] a County Championship fixture.

We must condense [illegible] by giving each man on the side an innings of five minutes, both sides fielding.

The eleven scoring the greater number of runs in the allotted period would, of course, be declared the winners. At all matches played in fine weather a military band should be in attendance. I fancy I can see C. B. Fry and Jack Hobbs endeavoring to take a ball off the middle stump and place it to leg when a selection of "rag-time" is given.

I have always understood that "money talks;" so if we desire absolute success in cricket from the spectacular point of view we must talk and think in thousands, as they do in the more refined world of football.

But—and a very big "but"—why do we want to make the game more attractive to the spectator? Cricket is a game, and not a business; and as a glorious branch of sport I know of nothing so full of pleasure.

Wheat Yield of Manitoba

A report of the Manitoba Department of Agriculture on the wheat yield per acre covering a period of thirty years shows that the yield ranged from 8.9 to 27.86 bushels, with an average of 18.53 bushels. Only six times in the thirty years was the yield below fifteen bushels, and eleven times it was twenty bushels or higher.

MONEY IN WOODLOTS

Scientific Principles to be Followed to Secure Best Results

There is no part of the farm which will give bigger returns for so little expenditure of time and labor as the woodlot, says Mr. B. R. Morton, expert forester for the Dominion Government, and there are three ways in which the farmer, by the exercise of ordinary common sense, can vastly improve the composition, protection and reproduction of his woodlot.

The first thing necessary is to improve the character of the crop, which can be done by cutting down and using for firewood all diseased and deformed trees, as well as such species whose presence in the woodlot is not desirable. Only too frequently is the method of cutting exactly the reverse. The best trees are cut, often for purposes for which an inferior wood would serve. Firewood probably yields the best returns for a small acreage and for this purpose rapid-growing such as poplar, ash and elm, should be encouraged, which should make an annual growth of from one-half to one cord per acre. Basswood, too, will be in increasing demand because of its rapid growth, because it coppices readily and because of its [illegible] [illegible] for the manufacture of [illegible], cooperage stock and other small articles for which the wood is particularly adapted. [illegible]

[illegible]

The [illegible] [illegible] in the woodlot is that the cattle be kept out, especially after heavy cutting, when reproduction is most desired. Cattle are just as injurious to a young crop of tree-seedlings as they are to a young crop of grain. They may indeed eat the grass in the woodlot, but they would just as soon, if not sooner, eat the young and tender hardwood shoots, and the same can be said of sheep. Even conifer seedlings are not immune, so that certainty in production is only ensured by fencing off the cut-over areas.

TWO PESTS OF CATTLE

How to Prevent and Control Lice and Ringworm

These two pests of housed cattle trouble most in dark, damp, dirty, badly ventilated stables. Remedial measures fail if only the animals are treated. So long as calves and adult cattle remain on pasture they are not bothered with vermin or skin disease; but when they go into winter quarters the trouble starts. The reason is that eggs ("nits") of lice remain in the stable from season to season, while the vegetable parasite of ringworm lives on damp walls, partitions, fences and other woodwork as well as on the skin of animals. Both pests, therefore, are acquired in the stable. If animals are to be made comfortable by keeping them free of lice and ringworm the stable should be specially prepared for their reception. Each animal should be allowed four square feet of window-glass and five hundred to eight hundred cubic feet of air-space in the stable.

Good ventilation, too, is absolutely necessary, and by preference should be of the King system. In this method of ventilation the fresh air enters at the ceiling, drives the hot air downward upon the backs of the cattle and is sucked out through wall vents near the ground-level and connecting with pipes discharging through a high chimney in the roof. The cleansing process consists in removing all loose trash, litter and soiled feed, scrubbing walls, mangers, partitions, floors and ceiling with a 1-50 solution of coal-tar disinfectant or crude carbolic acid or solution of four ounces of formaldehyde or sulphate of copper to a gallon of water. Fresh-made lime-wash is then applied with a spraying pump, which forces the wash into every crack, cranny and crevice. An [illegible]

[illegible] or Persian or pyrethrum insect-powder. Mercurial ointment (blue ointment) is effective when applied to the poll of the head and along the backbone; but treated animals must be separated to prevent licking of the ointment, which is poisonous. Ringworm is indicated by bare, white, scaly, crusty spots upon the face, around the eyes and on the neck or other parts of young cattle. Treat by scraping and scrubbing each spot clean and then rubbing in iodine ointment every other day until well. "Barn itch," or ringworm, may also effect adult cattle, causing itching, scaly spots on the body and especially about the tail-head. Treat by scrubbing clean and wetting with a solution of two pounds of sulphate of copper to a gallon of water applied hot.

BURDENSOME NAMES GIVEN TO CHILDREN

One Girl Loaded Down With Twenty-six, One For Each Letter of Alphabet

Probably the most burdensome name ever bestowed on a child was that given by Arthur Pepper, a laundryman of West Derby, Liverpool, to his daughter, born in December, 1882. It comprised one name for every letter of the alphabet, and was certainly ingenious in its way, running: Anna Bertha Cecilia Diana Emily Fanny Gertrude Hypatia Inez Jane Kate Louise Maud Nora Ophelia Quince Rebecca Starkey Teresa Ulysis Venus Winnifred Xenophon Yetty Zeno. P, of course, was provided in the surname, Pepper.

Hundreds of examples of this poor form of parental wit were brought to light by an investigator. Noah's Ark Smith, Sardine Box, Jolly Death, Judas Iscariot Brown, One-too-Many Johnson, Not-wanted Smith, Bovril Simpson, Merry Christmas Piggott, Odious Keaton, Anne Domini Davis, are the names of children probably living who will have to bear them through life. How can such children observe the Fifth Commandment?

There was for a long time a curiosity in nomenclature on the Australian pension list. His name was "Through - much - tribulation - we - enter - the - Kingdom - of - Heaven Smith." The officials of the Pension Department very pardonably abbreviated him into "Tribby Smith."

It is not surprising that the names of Dickens' characters—odd though they are—should be found in real life, for it was from life that many of them were taken. Some, as we know, were copied from the names over shop doors, etc., but this was not the novelist's only source of selection. Among his papers John Forster found carefully-drawn-up lists of names, with the source from which he obtained them, and the longest lists were those drawn from the "Privy Council Education Lists." Some of the names thus noted are too extravagant for anything but reality—Jolly Stick, Bill Marigold, George Muzzle, William Why, Robert Gospel, Robin Scrubbam, Sarah Goldsackit, Catherine Two, Sophia Doomsday, Rosetta Dust, Sally Gimblet!

CARE AND NEGLECT OF FARM MACHINERY

Proper Housing Over Winter Trebles Life of Binder—Interesting Data Gathered Over Wide Area

Recent investigations by the Conservation Commission reveal some very interesting facts regarding the effect of care, or neglect, as the case may be, upon the life of machinery on the farm. Between 90 and 95 farms, divided into three districts, were visited in each of the provinces of Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta.

In Saskatchewan, out of 94 farmers visited by the Commission's representative, 76 leave all of their implements out of doors. On 74 of the farms, there were no implement sheds of any description. On 21 of the farms, sheds large enough to cover a part of the implements were found. In most cases this being only a buggy or a democrat, but not on one single farm was the machinery all housed. Not one farmer was found who painted his implements to protect them from the weather.

In Manitoba only 14 out of 94 keep their machinery under cover during winter, while 44 claim to keep a part of it inside. On 34 of the Manitoba farms no provision whatever is made for protecting implements, and only four claim to have done any painting.

In the three districts visited in Alberta, mixed farming is carried on extensively, making more barn room available, so that implements are [illegible] [illegible]

Not a drug to take, not an hour to wait for relief—you just simply inhale the pleasant, piney vapor of Catarrhozone and get well quickly.

"What Catarrhozone did for me in one week was simply a miracle," writes Malcolm E. McIntosh from Sydney. "I had a frightful attack of Catarrh. My ears buzzed and my head was full of noises. The end of my nose was red and itchy—on the inside it was sore and excoriated. I had vile dropping from my throat and was very sick. Relief came quick—so I kept up the treatment and was absolutely cured by Catarrhozone."

Nothing else will so effectively and quickly cure you as Catarrhozone. Get the $1.00 outfit; it always does the trick. Small size 50c; sample trial size 25c., at all dealers.

Forgets the Lamp Law.

A Strange Mixture

One sometimes hears that milk is put into a glass of gin. One sometimes hears that pop is put into whiskey. Still one seldom hears of mixing pop and milk. Still, such a mixture seems to have been attempted yesterday morning. As a local milk man's rig was emerging from the White House yard yesterday the horse became frightened and ran away. As the flying steed sped north it ran into a horse and rig owned by a pop-maker doing business in the East Ward. Pop and milk became mixed, and the pop dealer's rig was badly damaged. One axle was shattered.

At yesterday's police court a man named McCarthy was charged with being drunk, and showed evident signs of a hold-over jag. He was remanded for a week, the Magistrate remarking, "I think a bath will do you good." Local Divine at Lindsay

Wonder: "Citizenship" was the subject of an interesting address given by Rev. L. Phelps, of Peterboro, formerly of the Queen Street Methodist Church, Lindsay. The address was particularly good and heartily appreciated. In part the reverend gentleman said: "Social questions have loomed up large in church problems recently. I have tried in the past five or six years to emphasize the department of citizenship, and have found it practically impossible to work. We have the best of literature and good workers, but somehow the citizens department in our Epworth League has not measured up, and yet it is a part of truly religious life. To separate citizenship from our religion destroys both."

The goods, admitted to have been stolen by the witness, were produced in court, and consisted of a dozen packages of tobacco, and cigars and included a pair of "Made in Germany" barber's shears. Witness said he stole the goods from Henderson's shop on Brock street. He got in through the back door. He had a skeleton key belonging to the prisoner that the latter gave him. He also mentioned Sullivan's Repair store in east city, saying "It would be all right if I could get in and get a bottle of whiskey." [illegible] the time. The Basketball game between St. Paul's and Cressman's, which was postponed from last Thursday evening, was played Tuesday evening of this week, and proved to be a very fast and exciting contest. The game was won by the Cressman's by a score of 25-21. F. Cressman had 5 goals to his credit, and Raynor 4. while D. Loucks did the best shooting for St. Paul's.

The public are cordially invited to witness these games each week, commencing at 8 o'clock.

A letter just received from Physical Director Carson, who is at Moncton, N. B., at the bedside of his mother. He states that there seems to be no hope of Mrs. Carson's recovery as she has taken no nourishment for over a week, simply being kept alive by hypodermics. Mr. Carson does not know when he will return but he expresses his appreciation of the volunteer workers who are keeping the classes going in the gymnasium.

All men who wish to participate in the Checker Tournament billed for next Tuesday evening should leave their names at the office some time this week. "Dear Mr. Monroe:

"Received your letter and parcel o. k., and should have written sooner, but have been very busy.

"The job is certainly a fine one and much more than I expected. I will carry it in fond remembrance of you and the Y. M. C. A., and the good old times I have spent there.

"The 57th are doing well down here and all are well. The whole battalion is now rounding into good condition. There are some 1000 officers and men down here. All have to work hard, but get very good meals and accommodation. We sleep in bunks built 3 high in rows. Each man gets a straw mattress and two blankets. We also get a complete outfit of clothing, including two suits of underwear, shirts, sweater coats, etc.

"We have a long day of it. Revallie sounds at 6 a.m. and we have to crawl out. Then there is calisthenics from 6.30 to 7 (in the dark). Breakfast is then served out. We fall in again at 8.30 and drill until 12 o'clock. After dinner we generally have a route march of about 5 miles or so to Barriefield for target practice. HEAVIER BOOTS FOR THE TROOPS

Ottawa, Ont., Dec. 3.—When questioned this morning in regard to the allegations of the London Times that the boots furnished the Canadian force are not heavy enough, Major-General Sam Hughes stated that the mud is so deep on Salisbury Plains that it is impossible to get leather heavy enough to keep out the moisture. However, as heavy an article as can be procured will be put into the boots for subsequent contingents. Letters received here from members of the force, while stating that their feet have not been dry for weeks, do not make any complaint as to the quality of the footwear provided.

Russia Wins Battle of Lodz, Captures Immense Number of Prisoners, Guns and Ammunition The Allies in The West Take the Offensive

Bulletin--London, Dec. 4.--5.32 p.m.--A despatch from Petrograd says: The battle of Lodz has ended in success for the Russian troops, According to the Bourse Gazette, which adds that great numbers of German prisoners, cannon, and machine guns are being brought into Lodz. In Galicia the Russian ring is drawing closer about the Austrians, and the energy of the enemy's resistance has gradually relaxed

BRITISH SECRECY POLICY HAS COMPLETELY BEFOOLED GERMANS

Censorship in Britain is Amply Justified--On Both Land and Sea the Germans Have Been Misled--Kaiser's Staff Not Able to Calculate Allies Movements Owing to Military and Naval Silence

London, Dec. 4.—I am informed on the highest naval authority that the story of a recent naval incident as published in the United States and as known in Germany, is not the full story of all that happened. Germany's naval strategy is once again befogged and upset by half truths which, if not in the British interests, disprove the statements made by the German press agents to the English news yesterday, and indicate how completely successful this British policy of befooling the enemy has been both on land and sea.

Thought U.S. Invaded Canada

Again, Germany believed United States troops had actually crossed Canadian territory and were being welcomed with open arms by Canadians at the very moment the Canadian contingent was assembling at Valcartier from every part of the Dominion.

In many other ways German authorities have been left completely at sea by British treatment of news, as explained by Asquith and Churchill.

Protest in London.

London, Dec. 4.—The Morning Post has renewed an attack upon the British press censorship, with particular reference to the secrecy enjoined on the British press regarding "a certain naval mishap, now nearly a month old", particulars of which have appeared in Canadian and American papers.

"We should like to speak plainly on this subject," says the Post, "yet the Tower may await us if we do. The British press is, in fact, forbidden to mention a mishap to the British navy of which the press of the whole world is speaking. The German press have for some time been in full possession of the facts, which they gathered from America, and are gloating over them, not so much because they relate to a material loss, but because their suppression in England seems to them to offer evidence that the British nation is in a state of panic and is not to be trusted with the truth.

"Thus, for example, the Kolnische Zeitung says: 'The English Government dared not communicate this serious loss to the nation, because it feared universal excitement. A very low estimate is thus placed by its own Government on the nerves and character of the English people, which gives one cause to think.' We are bound to say that for once we agree with a German newspaper. It does give one 'cause to think.'

"There is involved a mishap of considerable material dimensions, no doubt, but nothing to cause anything more than a national sigh of regret, and it is treated by the Government as if it were some appalling catastrophe, so dark that merely to read about it would throw the nation into a state of frenzy. It is ridiculous, but it is also humiliating.

"We say plainly that it is an insult, not only to the British press, but to the British nation."

Every Indication Points to a Forward Movement by the Allies

Paris, Dec. 4.—The development of the offensive northeast from Ypres, is indicated in today's official communique from the war office. The statement reports heavy cannonading intermittently between Ypres and Roulers. Fighting is also reported along the railway and about Becelaere and the Passchendaele road. Passchendaele is midway between Roulers and Ypres, being about 6½ miles from the latter point. Becelaere is about 4 miles south of Passchendaele. It is believed this movement represents another attempt of the allies to reach Menin, an important point on the Lys, upon which they have been unable to advance along the direct road from Ypres. The fighting reported today would apparently indicate a movement northward along the railroad toward Roulers as a part of an attempt to get around the German flank in this section in the Houthulst forest.

The official statement declares:

"There was heavy cannonading intermittently yesterday between Ypres and Roulers along the railway, and the Becelaere and Passchendaele roads. The Germans failed of success.

"In the Argonne several infantry attacks were repulsed.

"In Lorraine and the Woevre region cannonading continues.

"Calm prevails from the Somme to the Argonne and in Alsace."

Berlin, via wireless to Sayville, Dec. 4.— Athens reports state that England has landed 24,000 Canadian volunteers in Egypt, a statement issued here today declares.

It is supposed that Berlin's Athens correspondent has the Canadians mixed with the New Zealanders and Australian contingents who have landed in Cairo, according to yesterday's despatches.

Petrograd, Dec. 4.—An attack on the outer defences of Cracow is reported today. With Wieliczka now held by the Russians the enveloping movement at Cracow is progressing and the city will soon be completely invested.

GERMANY CANNOT SET HERSELF RIGHT IN THE EYES OF THE WORLD

Von Bethmann Hollweg's Speech an Abortive Effort to Disclaim Teutonic Responsibility for the War--The Tribune, of New York, Says Hollweg's Address in the Reichstag Was a Failure

New York, Dec. 4.— The Tribune this morning in commenting editorially on Chancellor Von Bethmann Hollweg's latest address to the Reichstag says:

"It was a failure so far as it was intended to set Germany right in the eyes of the outside world. The Germans are especially anxious to avoid two reproaches. They want to clear themselves of the charge that their government brought on the present war by pledging Austro-Hungary a free hand in dealing with Servia. They are also casting about for some excuse for having broken the treaty which bound them to respect and maintain the neutrality of Belgium. Von Bethmann Hollweg went far beyond this line of argument, however, when he tried to show that Russia and Great Britain precipitated the war. It is an absolute distortion of the facts to say that Russia, France and Great Britain, whatever their general attitude towards Germany may have been, manoeuvred to bring about the present conflict."

Suicides Among Germans.

Amsterdam, Dec. 4.—The number of suicides in the German army is rapidly increasing, according to the correspondent of the Telegraph. This is especially true among the men with families, it is stated. They feel that if they get through the war safely their health will be permanently impaired owing to the hardships which the German troops are forced to undergo.

The correspondent declares one soldier told him that going to the front was a nightmare for every German. Train loads of corps have passed through Louvain, bound eastward for Liege, where they are cremated. The bodies are sent from the front for cremation, it is said, because the Germans are unable to spare the men from the firing line to bury the dead.

$50,000 MUST BE RAISED FOR PETERBORO'S PATRIOTIC FUND

The Patriotic Fund Publicity Committee wants to gain the attention of the people. It is the function of this Committee to put out the facts, arguments, pleadings, and if necessary implorings that will enable the goal of $50,000 to be reached.

"How," says an enquirer, "are you going to do it?" Here's a starter.

On Monday morning the employees of the Ackerman Company Factory will donate their pay for that day, which will include the wages of the men and the salaries of the staff. Even Mr. R.F. Ackerman is to get into the line, take off his coat and will work with the men in order to be in line with the others.

Now this idea of giving the day's work is the result of a proposition made to the men, and in fact all employees and which has been most heartily accepted. Approximately $175.00 will be added to the Fund from this source. All honor to the men and women who are willing.

The Slate as Prepared.

The General Committee of the Fund are preparing a slate, setting out, in anticipation, what could be realized. Of course the slate is in some respect conjectural, but includes the following.

Two at $5000.00	$10,000.00
Three at $2500.00	7,500.00
Ten at $1000.00	10,000.00
Ten at $500.00	5,000.00
Fifty at $100.00	5,000.00
Fifty at $50.00	2,500.00
Fifty at $40.00	2,000.00
One hundred at $25.00	2,500.00
Fifty at $20.00	1,000.00
Two hundred at $10.00	2,000.00
Small amounts	2,500.00

We can very well learn from the experience of others and from what has been done in other places. Take Berlin, for example, and a very good one too. It probably heads the list of Canadian Cities for extent of giving, population and resources considered. It is notably and magnificently good.

Berlin's Canadian Patriotic Fund

The Berlin patriotic fund has now well nigh reached $100,000. This is a splendid showing for a city the size of Berlin. The figures below will show how these large amounts of money was contributed.

From Manufacturers	$26,268.00
From City Council Commission and officials	10,975.00
From Mechanics & Clerks	44,[illegible].00
From Business Men other than Manufacturers	10,1[illegible].00
From Commercial Travelers	2,[illegible]
From Legal fraternity and officials	2,[illegible]
From Collegiate Institute staff and pupils	1,[illegible]
From Hotelmen	1,[illegible]

From Fire Department	166.00
From St. Jerome's College and Students	116.00
From the Assyrians	76.00
From City Clergymen	40.00
From the Chinese	17.00
From citizens, not included in the foregoing	10,946.00
Total	$[illegible]

To have raised nearly $100,000 for a patriotic purpose in a city of 19,000 population is no small thing. It is an average of over $5 per head.

The mechanics, clerks and general public contributed $57,166, showing that the response on the part of our citizens was widespread.

Berlin may well congratulate itself on the outcome of its effort and those who so capably managed the campaign for it.

Peterboro Must Not Be Shamed

How well will Peterborough do? That remains to be seen. It will depend on the spirit and will of the people. If each one gives what he or they can easily spare the goal will not be reached. We must give until we feel hurt to accomplish the final sum.

Many societies and organizations are working to raise sums all to be devoted to the general good. These moneys will find a use along different channels. In connection with the detail of these efforts there is one feature that should be discouraged and that is the incessant assault made on the merchants to make donations of goods. It is not right, it is not manly. By themselves these contributions are not large, but in the aggregate they amount up. The requests for goods or supplies come from customers to the place where they trade. He must cut prices, and reluctantly, for he knows that the acquiescence is only the prelude for another attack.

In justice to the merchant he should get credit. He never will as long as he is importuned to make donations. Better if he, if all merchants, would refuse to be so bothered, but make one substantial subscription and be done with, and receive the credit he deserves. [illegible] will be concrete, genuine, constant, in the future, and now is the time to clamp down on this. Give a substantial amount to the Patriotic Fund and be in a position to say so and ward off all applications.

Special War Time Grant

A grant of $5,000.00 to the Peterborough Patriotic Fund as a SPECIAL WAR TIME GRANT, from the City Council, would on a total assessment of [illegible], approximately [illegible]

The citizen who pays taxes on a house and lot assessed for $2,000.00 would pay in taxes, as a special war contribution, FIFTY CENTS. [illegible]

[illegible]

There is a good deal of uncertainty and some anxiety with regard to the carriage and delivery of small parcels being sent to relatives and friends at Salisbury Plains, and on the Continent. Inquiry at a local Express Office showed that for delivery of a small parcel the Express Company would charge $2.00. This charge seems excessive. If there is any organization taking charge of such service as the despatch of such parcels, the fact should be made known. We are informed that Mrs. Percy McLean has charge of such a service for the Daughters of the Empire, to whom inquiries may be addressed.

In the western theatre of war French attacks against our troops in Flanders were repeatedly repulsed, as they were also in the region northwest of Altkirch, where the French suffered considerable losses.

In the eastern theatre of war the enemy's attacks east of the plain of the Masurian Lakes were repulsed with heavy losses to the Russians.

No successor to Mr. Flemming as Premier has been announced.

Several hundred Liberal supporters gathered last night at a banquet given in honor of L.A. Dugal and F. B. Mr. Carvell Offered Leadership

Mr. Carvell was urged to give up Federal for Provincial politics and lead the New Brunswick Liberal party.

The question of the leadership of the Liberal party in New Brunswick was again under consideration today, the first choice being Mr. Carvell and second Hon. C.W. Robinson. The Liberal representation in the present Legislature consists of two members.

VIOLENT BOMBARDMENT AT AIX NOULETTE

Paris, Dec. 4.—The German attack along the coast has been resumed and brisk fighting is also in progress in the region south of Ypres.

The official communique today declares there was lively cannonading both at Nieuport and in the Ypres region yesterday. The Germans are also again being flooded out at Dixmude. The inundation by the opening of the dykes is now extending south of Dixmude, the communique states. The official statement also states: "There was lively cannonading from Nieuport to the south of Ypres. The inundation is now extending south of Dixmude. Aix Noulette was violently bombarded. Slight progress was made in the Argonne district where several attacks of the enemy were repulsed.

"From the Somme to the Oise and in the Champagne district there is but little activity. The German artillery has been active in the Woevre region, but without results. In Lorraine and the Vosges there is nothing to report."

The Chairman and the City Solicitor were authorized to procure an office filing cabinet for use in the solicitor's office.

The chairman reported that the cost of running the incinerator has exceeded the estimate by some $300 or $400 besides an unlooked for quantity of fuel not provided for. Whatever deficit exists above the appropriation for upkeep of the incinerator will be made good from the balance on hand from the garbage collection account.

On motion of Aldermen Duncan and McIntyre council will recommend to enter into a contract with Mr. T. Williams for a refuse ground in North Monaghan at a charge of $[illegible] a year.

Tenders for Garbage Collection

The following tenders for garbage collection were opened:—

J. Blodgett—For whole district, $8,720. For No. 2 district, $1300.

W. Hanley—For district No. 4, $1,400; No. 5, $1,000.

E. K. Graham—For the whole area, $7,500.

Alfred A. Blodgett—For No. 1 district, $1,400; for No. 3 district, $1,475.

Geo. Mitchell and Frank Turner—For the whole area, $6,[illegible].

Peterborough Fuel and Transfer Co.—For No. 1 district, $1600; No. 2 district, $1700; No. 3 district, $1500; No. 4 district $1600; No 5 district, $1500. Or for the whole area in lump, $6,500.

The contract went to Messrs Mitchell and Turner, at $[illegible] for serving the whole area. This was the motion of Ald. Stratton and McIntyre.

ARGENTINE'S BIG STAKES

Horse Racing Flourishes Because of Huge Purses Offered

Don Miguel Martinez de Hoz who purchased Craganour, favorite in the Derby race made famous by the suicide of a suffragette, is no believer in the British racing system. He has an infinitely higher opinion of the methods of the Argentine racing authorities, and he attributes the flourishing condition of the breeding industry in that country entirely to the generous stakes put up for competition.

"In the Argentine," he pointed out, "the smallest stake for which we race is $2,000, and the highest is over $60,000, so that an owner with a decent string of horses can make from $100,000 to $150,000 a year from his racing ventures. The source from which these huge stakes spring is the totalisator system, which belongs entirely to the Jockey Club. The value of the stakes are increased enormously by the profits derived from the totalisator, and there is yet a surplus which is utilized for the buying of [illegible], the assistance of hospital funds, and other institutions.

The price paid for Craganour, by the way, was $150,000.

HOME-MADE ATLANTIC BOAT

Crippled Mariner Fails at Perilous Trip After Sailing Sixty Miles

Setting out to cross the Atlantic in a home-made sailing boat, a crippled Bridgeport mariner made only sixty miles when he had to be rescued by a fishing smack, that towed his boat back into Plymouth.

Horborrow, the mariner, had bad luck from the start in meeting head winds, and it took him five days to make that tiny slice of the big trip.

For two years Horborrow had worked at his boat, his only tools being a knife, saw, and hammer. When finished, it was a crude craft, equipped with water and oil tanks made by the old man.

With forty gallons of water, half a hundredweight of biscuits, and other provisions, Horborrow had hoped to last out his lonely voyage.

BARONESS ORCZY

Everybody who reads the best sellers of Baroness Orczy knows she has genius, but only a few people know that her business head matches her literary mind. She is said to be the richest author in England. One book alone, "The Scarlet Pimpernel," brought her royalties exceeding $200,000.

WHY YOU ARE WHITE

The Original Men Were Black, According to Investigator

What you eat determines your color, according to Bergfield, a German investigator. Not necessarily that you yourself could effect any change in color, but your ancestors for thousands of years have unconsciously been influenced by the food they have eaten and the drinks they have drunk.

For instance, the original men were black, says Bergfield. Their chief diet was of vegetables and fruits, he explains, and these same foods contain manganates that are not unlike iron. Dark browns and blacks result from this combination. It is a scientific fact that negroes who drink milk and eat meat are never as dark as those who eat vegetables.

He goes on to add that the Indian is red because for hundreds, and perhaps thousands, of years he has taken into his system the haemoglobin, or red material in the blood of animals which he has killed for food.

Again, Mongols are yellow because they have descended from races that were fruit-eating, and who, making their way into the deepest nooks and widest plains of Asia, developed into shepherds and lived largely on milk. Of course it is known that milk contains a certain percentage of chlorine, and has a decidedly bleaching effect. In the case of Caucasians, they are said to have become white by adding salt to their foods, which common salt is a strong chloride, and powerful in bleaching the skin.

PENNY DIP

A Gamble Combined With Economy For Hard-ups

The young and impoverished artists in Paris often have a great struggle to make ends meet. They are frequent visitors to the Paris Smithfield to take their chance at what may be called a penny pot-luck establishment.

In a big cauldron is steaming hot soup, and in the soup pieces of meat of varying sizes and quality. On payment of a penny the diner-out is given a big steel two-pronged fork, with which he is allowed to make one dip.

He is entitled to retain whatever is picked up and, in addition, gets a basin of soup and piece of bread. There is all the fascination of a gamble combined with economy in this method of buying food.

In the production of sulphur the United States is rapidly gaining on Italy, which leads the world.

SAVING THE SEALS

Only International Agreement Saved Them From Extinction

Russia, England, Japan and America agreed to suspend sealing in the open sea for fifteen years and sealing on land for five years. The need for this close season is explained by George Archibald Clark:

Pelagic sealing proved very destructive to the herd. It respected neither sex nor condition of the animals found, and the catch fell principally upon the nursing females, which were taken upon the summer feeding grounds in Behring Sea; for when the migration route of the seals had been covered the sealers entered Behring Sea and lay in wait for the mother seals as they visited the fishing banks one or two hundred miles distant from the islands for the purpose of feeding. As a result of the death of the mother, the dependent young starved to death on the rookeries. In the fall of 1896 sixteen thousand fur seal pups died of starvation on the rookeries of St. Paul and St. George islands.

As pelagic sealing developed through the increasing number of ships, its catch grew from 8,000 at the beginning to a maximum of 140,000 in 1894; but this could not last, and with the declining herd the pelagic catch also began to decline. In the season of 1911, the last of the industry, the catch numbered about 15,000 skins. From the known catch of the sealing fleets and from conservative estimates as to animals killed but not recovered it is apparent that more than a million breeding female fur seals and a like number of unborn and dependent young were destroyed during the thirty odd years the pelagic industry has been in operation. The result is the depleted condition in which we find the herd to-day. Our best information places the number of animals in the herd in 1867 at between two and three millions. It numbers to-day about 215,000.

FREAK PLANTS

Trap and Devour Insects, Digesting Bodies of Their Prey

Among the strangest of all nature's products are the insect-eating, or carnivorous, plants. They actually catch, eat, and digest various insects by a process practically as thorough as that of the animals.

The so-called Venus "fly trap" or "vegetable - butcher" is one of the most remarkable of these. It grows in a wild state in the forests of North Carolina, where it creeps along the ground, presenting thousands of gaping mouths, into which the unsuspecting fly or insect is lured and imprisoned.

The leaves of this plant consist of two valves, shaped like clam shells, which, when closed, form a trap. The ends of the leaves are baited with a sweet juice which attracts the insect. The leaves are covered with minute hairs, which correspond very closely to the arrangements of the nervous system in animals. On the edge of the leaves are rows of long, fine teeth.

When the unsuspecting insect has been lured to the leaf by the attractive juice he steps upon one of the microscopic hairs, and the two valves shut with a snap, keeping Mr. Fly secure.

Still more curious are certain plants in Borneo, which distill liquors for the purpose of luring their victims. Many of these are miniature grog shops. In their leaves are little pitchers, which are filled with hard alcoholic liquors. Each of the pitchers has a tight-fitting cover which keeps the dew and rain from diluting the liquor. No scientists have yet succeeded in analyzing the liquors with any satisfactory results, but it is evident that they are of different kinds, since different species of the plants attract different insects.

The most unique of all the productions of nature is the plant popularly known as the "goose plant." It is a native of Guatemala, and receives its name from the bud, which has the shape of a goose floating along the water with its neck proudly arched. The flower is very beautiful, but repulsive. It has an odor resembling that of decayed meat. The plant attracts the carrion fly, which is the agent of fertilization.

RAND HIGH-GRADERS

Precious Metal Stolen After It Leaves the Stamps

Most people have heard of I. D. B. (illicit diamond buying), a crime which in South Africa is punished with penal servitude on the breakwater at Cape Town.

The Rand, however, has the lesser-known offence of I. G. B. (illicit gold buying). Considering that in the Rand mines only a few pennyweights of gold go to a ton of quartz, it is obvious that the miner does not get much chance of stealing the precious metal. When does the gold thief get his opportunity?

The pieces of quartz are ground into dust by powerful hammers known as "stamps." Water then washes the dust over inclined plates coated with amalgam. The gold instantly combines with the mercury in the amalgam, afterwards being readily separated by chemical process.

It is of this gold-laden amalgam that the dishonest employe will scrape off portions which, though small, will mount up to a good bit of gold in time.

The claim which was made by ship owners and others, and which has been confirmed to a considerable extent by official records kept by the Marine and Fisheries Department of the Dominion, that the level of the river and Great Lakes is being constantly lowered, principally by drainage operations on a large scale, is to be thoroughly tested by a Commission appointed by the Canadian Government. Gauges were placed at various points between Port Arthur and Quebec to make the required tests.

Is it Primitive and Brutal for Boys to Wish to Enlist?

By Winifred Black

(Copyright, 1914, by Newspaper Feature Service, Inc.)

Winifred Black

I MET my friend at the club the other day. My friend was not quite herself, and she soon told me the reason why.

"This war," she said, "and the talk of war—it is all so hideous, so brutal, so [illegible]. I thought we were all through with that sort of thing long ago.

"And day before yesterday my own son wanted to enlist.

"I thought he was joking at first. I couldn't believe it of him. Why, I took him to a peace congress with me when he was only 7 years old, and I never would let him drill when he was at high school.

"I couldn't bear to have him talk the gentle art of murder.

"And I thought he understood—but he didn't. He didn't understand at all. He is just as primitive today as—his grandfather, for instance.

"He talked about his grandfather and said he was proud of him for fighting in the civil war, and asked me why I kept his grandfather's sword on the wall.

"He said he should think I would be ashamed to do such a thing—and I really feared that I was wrong; I didn't realize the power of the suggestion of it.

"Oh, he talked terribly. He said he was sick of teas and tangos and automobiles and pets.

"He said he was tired of sitting in an iron cage at the bank and watching old skinny girls when he told them what their balance was. He said he wanted to be a man—for once—just a plain man, like some of the fellows who died for their country's flag down there in Cuba.

The Boy's Handicaps.

"His father thought it was awfully funny; he almost died laughing at the boy and his heroics. But I didn't laugh. I couldn't. After all I've done to civilize that boy. Why, he's a member of the Brotherhood of Man Society, and he wears an Audubon badge. Isn't it terrible?"

"My dear," said the woman across the table, "it's worse than terrible. There's my boy, too—such a splendid, broad-minded, free-thinking fellow as we thought we'd brought him up to be.

"He's talked all the old rubbish about his country and honor and courage —my dear, it was shocking. I'm completely discouraged."

They were all talking about it—the terrible effect of this old-fashioned war talk on the young men. It brutalized them, they thought, and it made them so "primitive" and so "unadvanced."

I thought of the boy who wanted to enlist. I happened to know him. I never thought very much of him; he seemed an effeminate sort of creature some way—always helping his mother hand around the tea, or teaching somebody's sister a new tango step. I'm going to look at that boy the next time I see him. Somehow I want to see what he really looks like, when he's not bowing or smirking or handing tea.

The other chap—I saw him coming out of a pool room, when I was on my way home from the tea. It seems to me I'm always meeting him in the vicinity of that pool room.

I wonder what he'd make of himself if he went out and was hungry once or twice a week and cold a night or two and slept on a marsh or in an open field a few times.

He's always been petted and spoiled and sheltered. How would it be with him to be a man among men? I suppose it would brutalize him terribly.

A Day to Remember.

Of course, it is all very primitive and very brutal and very old-fashioned, all this business of soldiering, and I know I ought to be ashamed of myself for the lump that rises in my throat when I see the old flag that my father fought for snapping in the free wind of my father's country—but when I got home from the tea I found a telegram waiting for me and there was news in the telegram.

Bad news—for the boy I have held in the core of my heart so long that I do not see how I ever lived before he [illegible] there had enlisted. [illegible]—he, who has been ill and ailing so long; he, whom I have tried so hard to guard from every wind that blows! And all at once his heart stirring, and he is a boy no longer.

Perhaps the boy I love would be better trying to make somebody buy a piece of land that isn't worth the selling, or learning how to beat some trusting client out of a perfectly good case in court.

Maybe it will brutalize him to keep regular hours and lift up his feet and throw back his shoulders and keep step and take orders. But, somehow, I can't feel that way about it.

The boy I love will probably never get his chance to do what he wanted to do, go out and fight for his country's flag; but he tried to do it.

And if I live to be an old, old woman, I shall never think of the day when that boy was primitive and brutal enough to [illegible] my heart will sing, and I shall lift my white head and walk with shoulders as near to a proud and martial step as I can manage!

What a shame it is to be so hopelessly old-fashioned!

Advice to Girls

By ANNIE LAURIE

Dear Annie Laurie:

I am 18 years of age, though I am younger in actual experience. I have never been much alone in the company of men, and have never allowed them to hug and kiss me. Most of the boys I know are gentlemanly, though some of them often ask me to allow them to kiss me. I have asked the advice of a few nice girls I know, and they laugh at me and tell me it is no harm if you know the young man well enough. Will you please advise me?

ELIZABETH.

WHAT makes you think the girls are "nice," Elizabeth? And do you think they are wise as well as "nice"?

For my part, I do not think them either nice or wise. They take a decidedly coarse point of view, and you may tell them I said so if they should ask you.

Haven't you any brothers? Why don't you ask them what they think of a girl who lets them kiss her whenever they want to. Oh, yes, they'll want to often enough, of course; men always want to kiss any girl who isn't positively offensive.

It isn't you these boys are in love with, [illegible], don't think so for a minute. They are in love with the little [illegible] and that is a very dangerous game for little girls like you to play.

There's so much risk in it. I can't bear even to think of it when I think of a sweet girl like you.

Who are these boys these other girls laugh about? And how well is the "well enough" that they know them? What do they know about them?

Where they live, and who their fathers are, and whether they have money enough to buy an ice cream soda now and then? That isn't enough. It isn't even half enough.

Keep your kisses for some one who's worthy of them, little Elizabeth. Do you remember the story of your name sake—Elizabeth of Hungary? She gave bread to the poor, and when her cruel husband came and caught her with her arms full of bread, the bread was changed by a miracle to roses.

Kisses are not so easily changed, little Elizabeth, and if they do turn to roses they are apt to be roses with sharp and cruel thorns.

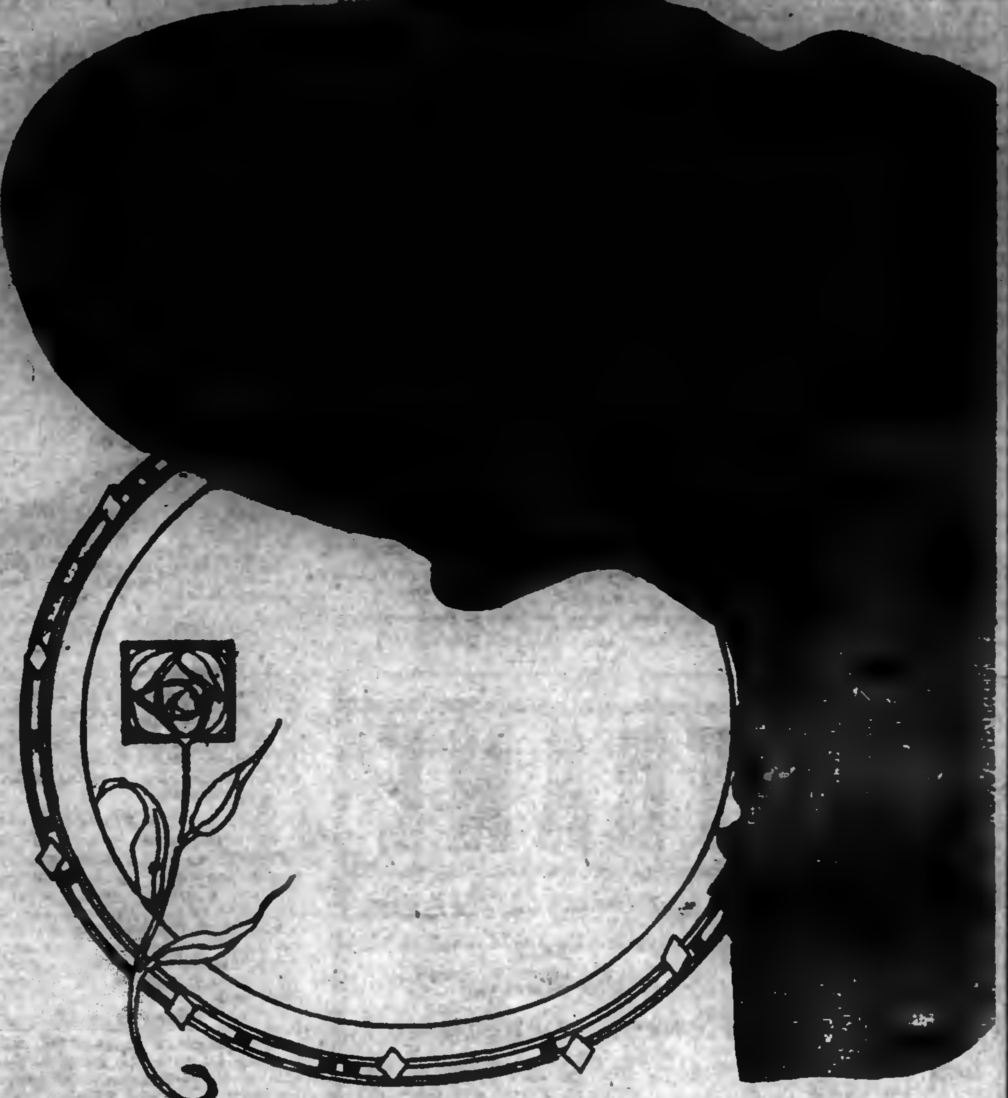
THE VALUE OF HUMOR IN LIFE



Ann Murdock, in "A Pair of Sixes."

"Wit May Be Cultivated," Says Actress

By ELEANOR AMES

HUMOR can be cultivated. If it seems to have been left out of your make-up, don't despair. Learn how to appreciate humor even if you can't be actively and actually humorous. Some of the best judges of humor, some of the most inspiring friends of humorists are those who never do or say anything humorous, but who have a keen and discriminating idea of what constitutes humor, and are able to open the doors of opportunity to those really blessed with humor.

The dictionary gives "wit" and "merriment" as synonyms for humor. It defines it as "a disposition of mind or feeling."

Ann Murdock, who is responsible for the statement that it can be cultivated, says there is no use in defining it, for genuine humor can't stand defining. And Ann Murdock herself combines the genius of the humorist with a discerning appreciation of humor.

Over a cup of tea, sipped between a luncheon and the tango at a dansant tea, Miss Murdock, with a mischievous light in the corners of her otherwise demure eyes and an optimistic curl to her mouth, held forth on the subject of humor.

"There is really no excuse for the normally intelligent human being having to acknowledge to a lack of the sense of humor," she declared. "Humor can be learned as well as languages and art. The reason that it has not been rated a learnable thing is because the world at large has long maintained a most stupid and rigid idea of what humor is. To me the most humorous thing about humor is that it can't be defined. It simply is, and it can be learned, but it can't be taught.

"It has to be puzzled out by the individual. But it is worth puzzling about, for it is the most delightful and valuable possession, and lightens and brightens life more than anything I know of except money; and it even makes up for a lack of money.

"The man or woman with a genuine sense of humor will find comfort in misfortune.

"It is the backbone of courage. I have always declared that all wonderfully heroic and courageous persons have a fundamental supply of humor, even if they don't know it.

"A sense of humor is the sunshine of life. Any time you can laugh in your heart the battle is won.

"The best humorist is the unconscious one. The humorist who is convinced of it loses some of his reality. Better no humor at all than the made to order, displayed-for-a-purpose brand!

"How can one gain the sense of humor? Ah, there's the proof of what I have been saying. One can't give a rule for laying in a supply of humorous sense—but one can do it.

"Looking beneath the surface of life is the only way in which I can express what I mean. There is the obvious and we all see it. And there is the underlying current—and we don't all see it. And there is the humor of life—in the underlying current, in what does not appear on the surface, in the subtlety of understanding.

"We all are apt to drag through the world with our mental and physical eyes half-closed. The humorous-minded person has his alert. He sees what is there and what might be there."

Monotonous Suburbanism.

LEONA DALRYMPLE

WHEN Mary and I were first married we had some notion of living in the bustling little town in which mother and dad and Mary's people have lived all their lives. There was, however, a little suburban settlement springing up on the outskirts of town and there we eventually went, partly because rents were cheaper, partly because we found an idyllic little house that just suited our [illegible] notions of what a house should be. With the beautiful idealism of honeymooners we quite ignored the daily trolley trip into business or shopping. Now I must confess the deadly monotony of the place is getting on my nerves.

I firmly believe the little settlement in which I live is the most suburban spot on the globe. The houses all look alike; the people all think alike; we all fuss over trivial and unnecessary things, and I've begun to believe we all look alike, stamped with a certain suburban mark that not one of us has escaped. And we all carry bundles home.

Lately I've begun to catalogue the topics of conversation in which we men indulge as we fare forth in the early morning to catch trains and trolleys.

"Hello," sings out one man, "started up your furnace yet, Peter? We're having a devil of a time with ours. Had to have it cleaned out and something or other mended."

"I've rigged up a dandy stunt for my furnace," enthuses another householder, who is somewhat inventive. "It's a system of ropes and pulleys, and in the morning I merely set my alarm for a certain time, lean out of bed, push the lever and go to sleep again. The lever operates the pulleys and turns on the fire. Then when I get up the house is as warm as toast."

Now this sort of conversation is all very well, provided we use it in occasional weight, but for a daily diet it is deadly.

Each morning without fail a half-dozen of us who take the same car discuss furnaces and wood, the cost of coal and various other domestic things. We seem to have certain channels worn in our brains and the sight of a [illegible] starts us immediately to thinking of firewood and coal, house and lawn, [illegible], furnaces and various other householding interests. There is one man who always [illegible] types. He cleared his lawn of a [illegible] or so and talks daily of a [illegible] [illegible] of firewood. Our topics vary only with the seasons.

The women are no better—and, incidentally, no worse. They have sewing circles and card clubs and a few other fancy clubs. They talk children and husbands, houses and furnaces, too. Few of them know what is going on beyond the limits of Suburbanville. Now I realize that children and husbands and furnaces and houses are essential to the wellbeing of society, but just why we must hash and rehash them over and over in a mental circle is one too many for me.

The whole truth about the matter is that we're so suburban we're beginning to [illegible]. Suburbanism seems to have sapped all our mental resources. Most of us have either built houses or bought them and we're settling all on a new set, with the result that whether or not a man has given doorknobs put in his new house is important enough to merit an hour's exhaustive discussion.

But the thing is getting more and more on my nerves. I don't like the spirit of a new and small community. I like old houses, old towns, old streets, even if they do harbor a bit of gossiping. There's a more picturesque flavor in an old town than in a [illegible] new suburban village. All of our houses have [illegible]

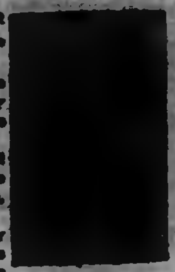
Secrets of Health and Happiness

Why Bad Home Habits Cause You to Lose Hair

By Dr. LEONARD KEENE HIRSHBERG

A. B., M. A., M. D. (Johns Hopkins).



DR. HIRSHBERG

SOME men are so prudent and full of health that they can distinguish and divide a hair 'twixt the south and south-southwest of the left eyebrow.

On the other hand, there are many more persons who do not realize that their bad household habits of today are the sources of falling locks, baldness and gray hairs of the grown-up.

The hair of your head, like the quills of the fretful porcupine, differ from the scalp and the skin. Like rare jewels, swords and guns, they are useful and decorative, but lack red-blood nerves and lymph channels.

The only difference between the beautiful, dark, curly locks of Genevieve and the thick, coarsely textured hairs of cats, swine and certain animals is that the former are soft, smooth and elastic and called tresses, while the latter are rough, stiff and thick and termed bristles.

Of the many and various origins of falling hair, gray shades and baldness already mentioned to you, too little emphasis has been laid upon the disregard of individual combs and brushes for children, as well as all other members of the family.

Common Brush Used.

It is truly amazing and simultaneously a powerful indictment against universal free education to find that in nine hundred and ninety-nine homes of every thousand there are to be found only one comb and brush.

That is to say, from five to ten persons use the same comb and brush and own it in common. In these days of newspapers, widely disseminated information on hygiene and preventive medicine, it [illegible] as unbelievable as one family using the same, single tooth brush. Yet it is not a jot more improper, unethical, as well as insanitary, to brush or comb the hair with a mother's or father's comb and brush than to use his or her tooth brush.

Practically, it is decidedly worse. It is storing up trouble in years to come. For, it must be plain, the dirt, germs and contagions in the tooth brush are destroyed by the tooth paste used, whereas the hair brush and the comb transfer the dust and microbes from Mr. Smith's scalp to little John's curly locks without the interposition of antiseptics, germicides, mechanical antiseptics or disinfectants even of a make-believe kind.

A large head of hair may be honestly said to add loveliness to a good face and hideousness to a bad one. But this is no justification for barbers to use the same brush and comb on every next patron who comes to be barber-cured.

The Sanitary Plan.

I know one ultra-forward looking, super hygienic barber in the United States. Few have heard of him because his haunting out place is a small village. This gentleman was an orderly at a hospital, and there he imbibed knowledge that has served him well. He obviates many of the dangers of the lingering locks by supplying each patron with an individual 2-cent brush and a penny comb. These are unwrapped from an aseptic package and used to comb the customer's hair. Then they are burned up.

The cost is trivial, the reward is the preservation of a cleanly, full-grown, thick head of hair. It remains for other progressive barbers to avail themselves of the same, sanitary and prophylactic procedure thus adopted.

It should not require special legislation on the part of boards, legislatures, city councils and other such bodies to force barbers to go to school and learn these new things and to adopt them in their shops. Self-preservation and the rewards of efficiency should suffice to point out to the tonsorial tradesmen exactly what is best for them.

It was a wise inspiration that made the bard say: "He that hath a beard is more than a youth and he that hath no beard is less than a man." The rapid growth of the beard in certain climates and races in youth is also shown in the biblical command to "tarry at Jericho until your beards be grown."

Your eyes do not need to grow. If you will arrange your hair in the latest fashionable mode, you will observe the same effect as if you had larger eyes. Just as blue frocks, collars and hats make the eyes blue and gray costumes make gray eyes a deeper gray, so a proper arrangement of the face and hair will make the eyes seem larger.

By Ann Marie Lloyd

WHEN it is said of a young housekeeper that "she can't even boil potatoes" it is generally supposed that she has failed by the supreme test of culinary ignorance. Yet there are many more or less experienced cooks who are not able to boil potatoes well, and, as one witty person has said, "boiling the most useful and honorable of all garden truck."

It requires quite a bit of knowledge to boil a potato as a potato deserves boiling.

To begin with, there is one absolute rule to be remembered in cooking all green vegetables. They should be washed in cold water and cooked in boiling water. Salt should be added in the proportion of one teaspoonful to each quart of water, but whether at the beginning of the process of cooking or after the vegetables are partially cooked is a matter of choice.

It will take half an hour to boil potatoes. It may take longer. Potatoes should never be boiled at a furious bubble. They should be treated to continuous and gentle boiling.

Old potatoes should be soaked in cold water for at least an hour after being pared before they are boiled. As soon as they are tender they should be drained thoroughly, allowed to dry by shaking them in the saucepan and setting them on the back of the range, where they are covered with a warm towel until serving time. Then they must be served in an open dish. Never put a cover over any potatoes when they are sent to the table.

Mashing is the secret of good mashed potatoes. After they are boiled, drain and slowly heat in the saucepan, and then mash them with a wire masher. Add plenty of butter, a dash of pepper and salt to taste, and beat the milk hot and enough of it to make the potatoes [illegible] creamy. After it is added beat with a silver fork and then heap it lightly in the dish. Never pat or smooth it.

If you want a change from the regulation mashed potatoes, try potato balls. To each pint of hot mashed potatoes add an ounce of a teaspoonful of celery salt and some chopped parsley and form into round smooth balls and fry in a basket in deep fat, or bake in buttered tins in the oven.

Baked potatoes are delicious and add much to a dinner where there are no other vegetables.

Take two cups of the hot mashed potatoes and add a teaspoonful of onion juice, a tablespoonful of finely chopped parsley, the well beaten yolk of one egg, the stiffly beaten whites of four eggs, half a cup of grated cheese, a dash of paprika and salt to taste, beat thoroughly, heap in a buttered baking dish and bake till light brown.

Potato puff is a similar dish without the onion.

To two cups of hot mashed potato add half a cup of milk, two well beaten eggs, two tablespoonfuls butter, some salt and pepper, and beat well. Then add the stiffly beaten whites of two eggs. Pile in a ball in a buttered baking dish, and bake in a hot oven till it is puffed and delicately colored. Both these delicious potato concoctions are far better served in the same receptacle in which they are baked. There are attractive fireproof baking dishes to be had at reasonable prices in all shops dealing in kitchen utensils that add to the table. If you have none, wrap a snowy napkin about the dish. [illegible] is acceptable for the home table.

Stuffed potatoes are a meal in themselves, and a fitting accompaniment of cold meat.

Bake six smooth and uniform-sized potatoes one hour. When they are done, remove a lengthwise slice, scoop out the potato with a spoon, mash, add butter, salt, pepper, half a cup of milk, two eggs, whites beaten separately, refill skins with this piled lightly, and bake till brown and puffy.

Everyday Heroes

THE bugle calls to action, and the sound
Of martial music thrills the soldier's heart.
The tramp of feet, the roll of musketry,
Are living things in which he bears a part.
And as he marches on at duty's call,
Unheeding brave the foe or danger near,
So thrilled he with the panoply of war
His heart, though craven, knoweth not a fear.

But in the common, quiet walks of life,
No drum or bugle sounds the earnest call;
No cheer awaits the victor if he rise,
No marble keeps his memory if he fall.
The plodding, grinding work from day to day
To win the needed bread by which we live,
And [illegible] shown strong for daily toil,
Doth much better need than what we give.

Not only on the crimson battlefield
Is manly courage, manly vigor shown.
To build is grander far than to destroy,
And braver far to smile o'er pain than groan.
Not many lives receive the merit due,
For none can know a brother's want or care,
Save as the rippling of the current shows
What far below in silence [illegible] there.

Not all the Truth

A prominent American newspaper, the New Orleans "United States," has the following: "The American Truth Society, of Munich, is out with quite an energetic protest against the employment of Asiatic troops by the Allies. "England," the cable message reads, "has imported from India hordes of Ghurkas, Sikhs, Afridis, and other Hindu tribes, and France, emulating her example, has now brought over from Aftica the barbarous Sengalian negroes and the savage Turcos. Americans, can you contemplate without scorn and horror this introduction into Europe of thousands of heathen Africans and Asiatics to slughter your Christian kin?"

There was a time when such an appeal would have met with a ready response in this country, but since. Germany, like France, emulating the example of England, has called to her side hordes of Asiatic and European Turks, and is attempting to stir up the "heathen" of Egypt, India, and other Asiatic and African countries to strike at the British Empire, it no longer carries weight. In the interests of pure truth the American Truth Society of Munich should have included Germany as well as England in its strictures."

A Word of Strategy

(Boston Herald)

Violation of Belgium neutrality has turned, tactically as well as sentimentally in favor of the Allies. The Russian storm has burst over Silesia, and the German higher command is beginning to realise the folly of attempting to fight on fronts 600 miles long, even if these fronts were of their own choosing.

If we had a few million Canadian invaders on our north, and a few million more from Mexico on our south, it might occur to us to remain on the defensive on one front and concentrate our attacks on the other. There was a moment when some simple and natural decision of this sort seemed to have been taken by Germany. But it was soon abandoned. Moltke always used to say that he could hold the Rhine frontier with a small force against almost any army, and that if Germany wished to defeat the Russians decisively the Rhine frontier was her best chance in the west. Moltke certainly would never have suggested that Germany, attacked on two fronts, not to speak of the sea, would find economy of force by holding a line from Switzerland to the North Sea. His rigid abstention from even the idea of violating Belgium neutrality was in part due to his recognition that it would impose on Germany a war in the West on an intolerably long front, and by so much reduce her power to act offensively and successfully in the east. He thought that the line, Luxemburg-Belfort was quite long enough, and in his view the neutrality of Belgium was, in this sense, advantageous to Germany.

But German militarism having imposed on German policy a mistake for which it will never be forgiven, now finds itself caught in the toils. She is compelled to fight on a 300-mile front in the west at the moment when Russia has been able to run over her rear guards in Poland and Galicia. To clear her terrieory of enemies, and to mass her troops on the frontiers without serious hindrance. Germany's troops have fought magnificently, but their position, like Napoleon in 1812, is precarious, for when one lights a candle at both ends, one must not be surprised to find the flame coming from both directions.

Sciatica Vanishes Instantly If Nerviline is Used

You can always depend on the old-time "Nerviline." Nothing made to-day is as good for Sciatica as Nerviline was when first produced, about forty years ago. All this time the same old "Nerviline" has been curing Sciatica, Lumbago, Rheumatism and is considered to be without an equal in relieving pain or soreness anywhere. "'Nerviline' couldn't be made stronger or better," writes James E. Edwards. "The way it cures Sciatica is to me simply a miracle. For years I suffered frightfully. I ruined my stomach with internal dosing. I rubbed in gallons of oils and liniments none were strong enough. One good rubbing with Nerviline relieved. I kept on rubbing and shortly was cured. My father cured rheumatism in his right arm and shoulder with Nerviline, and my mother cured herself of chronic lumbago with Nerviline. Our family simply swears by Nerviline and we are never without a 50c family size bottle in our home. We find that for external pain, for coughs, colds, earache, such minor ills it is a veritable family physician."

SITUATION AT PRYEMSYL IS QUITE DESPERATE

London, Dec. 3.—For the first time since the Germans were checked in their advance on Warsaw, it was possible today to gain a fairly clear idea of the military situation in Russian Poland in its broader aspect. Advices from both Berlin and Petrograd indicated that the Germans had definitely succeeded in throwing back the enveloping Russian forces, and were maintaining stolidly their positions west of Lowicz. Furthermore, it is said, that the Germans are undertaking an energetic offensive.

The completeness of change in the situation, ascribed variously to the failure of the Russian General Rennenkampf, to close up the ring about the Germans and to the brilliant strategy of the German leaders, is indicated by a report telegraphed from Petrograd by an English correspondent, who previously had announced that the Russians had won an overwhelming victory. He now states that the Germans are holding their positions, and that the situation "remains extremely interesting and hazardous." The latest official announcement from Petrograd states that the fighting has become less severe.

In Galicia the situation is still confused. Russian reports from Petrograd that the Russians had invested Cracow on three sides are now contradicted by an unofficial despatch, which says that the invaders are eight miles from the city.

The archbishop of Przemysl, the Galician stronghold which has been under siege for several weeks, is quoted as saying that the situation there is desperate and that the surrender of the city impends.

Berlin, via The Hague, Dec. 3.— It was officially stated today that the Russian attack north-west of Wolbrom was repulsed. The battles on the plains west of Nowo Radomsk and Lodz are developing favorably.

INTRODUCTION

The Glenaladale Silver Black Fox Company, Limited, was incorporated in 1913 with six pairs of foxes, at $90,000. This Company re-capitalized in 1914, with 20 pairs of beautiful Silver Black Foxes, at $15,000 per pair, making a total capitalization of $300,000.

THE FOXES

Six pairs (one year old) proven breeders, and fourteen pairs (1914 pups), making a total of 20 pairs—all young foxes—good for at least 10 years. This Company has bought some of this year's options on foxes with a guarantee that they are pedigreed and of the highest strain and very best quality P. E. Island ranch foxes.

THE RANCH

The ranch is situated on the well known Glenaladale Farm, owned by Major C. McKinnon, formerly the homestead of Sir William [illegible], and is only 12 miles from Charlottetown, in a quiet locality sufficiently removed from any disturbance.

THE RANCHER

Mr. Arthur W. McKinnon, our Ranch Manager, has had much experience in breeding foxes, and has the practical knowledge necessary to efficiently manage and care for the animals.

The foxes will be ranched free of charge to the Company for the first year. This means a large saving to the shareholders, as some companies have to pay as high as 25 per cent. of the income for ranching purposes.

The promoters of this Company are retaining $90,000 worth of stock for themselves. $[illegible] worth has already been disposed of, leaving $[illegible] to be offered to investors at $25.00 per share, with a guarantee that a dividend of 50 per cent. will be paid in cash in 1915, or whatever more it may be.

The Glenaladale Silver Black Fox Co., Limited, in 1913 guaranteed a dividend of 50 per cent. but are going to pay 50 per cent. in cash and 50 per cent., in stock in 1914. The Company is in good standing and to each and every investor the first of September, 1914, we can say—"We have given you 50 per cent. more than we promised." And we feel sure that in 1915 all the shareholders in this re-capitalized company will be able to say they received more than they were promised.

This Company can truthfully say that they have not one cent of watered stock in the Company. Now Mr. Investor, if you were a Company and we the shareholders, we would look to you for justice to give us all that was honestly due us. We would not like for you to buy 2 pairs of foxes at $15,000 per pair ($30,000) and form a fox company and capitalize your concern at $[illegible] and make us pay, as shareholders, for it. The Glenaladale Silver Black Fox Company, Limited, will ask you to do nothing like that. We want to let you in on the ground floor.

NOTICE

When a fox company guarantees any specified dividend to its shareholders, and when said company is an incorporated body, you need not be afraid of any unfair play, for such company is compelled to pay what they promise, and, besides, every interest is taken for the welfare of both the investor and the company.

The promoters of this Company are all above board and will not permit any crook to come in and do anything that is not right. Anyone holding stock in this Company who is dissatisfied can, by notifying the Secretary-Treasurer, have his or her money promptly refunded.

FORTUNES IN FOXES

There is money in fox ranching more than anything else ever known. It is good for the rich man and good for the poor man. A poor man cannot buy a pair of Silver Black Foxes but he can easily raise $25.00, $50.00 or $100.00. By investing in this Company he gets back his money in at least two years and then he will have an income for life and for his children to come—and after them will be money in fox farming. One of the reasons for this is that P. E. Island has now 95 per cent. of the world's foxes in captivity. For every one pelt that can be raised there are more than 25 wealthy people waiting for it in London, Russia, France and America.

PELT VALUES

The Fox Pelts have advanced greatly in price since 1910 and you can see for yourself what money was in them then.

Below are the particulars of sale of a consignment of Silver Fox Furs, shipped from Prince Edward Island ranches to London, England, and sold there in March, 1913:

SHARES

Shares are selling at $25.00 each: 25 per cent. with application and the balance on or before September 1st 1914.

Simply fill out the application form and mail to Major C. McKinnon, Secretary-Treasurer, Glenaladale, P. I.

All cheques must be made payable to "The Glenaladale Silver Black Fox Co., Ltd."

A POINTER

Just to give you a little idea of what the free ranching of foxes means to the investor, we will figure it out for you.

We have twenty pairs of foxes in the ranch and suppose each pair produce a litter of only four pups this is equal to 40 pairs and at $15,000 per year it would figure out at $600,000. Now, if we had to pay even 15 per cent. of the income for ranching purposes (which is considerably lower than some companies pay) it would mean that we would have to pay $90,000 for ranching expenses.

We ranch the foxes free for the first year, so that in addition to a guaranteed dividend of 50 per cent., we save you this large outlay of money. While we guarantee 50 per cent., still should each pair in our ranch produce four pups it would mean that your dividend would be about 200 per cent. instead of 50 per cent.

FINAL WORD

A great deal has been written about Ranches, Grades of Foxes, etc., but after all the one object that every investor should keep before him is the dividend he is going to get. We have tried to show you in plain English what we can do for you and now that you have our proposition, compare it with the other made by any other company now in [illegible]— and then judge for yourself to have been [illegible] by some of the Charlottetown daily newspapers.

"This Shall Not Be a War Upon Our Women and Children"

HUSBANDS and Fathers, Sons and Brothers may go to Battle, but all the hordes of warring Europe shall not force them to leave grim privation and terror of want encamped at their hearthstones.

Give! Give! To the Peterboro' Patriotic Fund

Give in the name of our own Women and Children, fortunately not robbed of their Husbands and Fathers.

The Idea of the Canadian Patriotic Fund is This:

THE soldiers have gone to fight not for their home town or any particular locality but for all Canada.

The whole of Canada should combine to take proper care of their families.

The Fund is One Fund and each locality is administered by the local branch.

In Peterborough for instance, families of the soldiers will be looked after by the local Branch acting for the National Association.

All the families throughout Canada will receive aid on the same basis and none will be neglected.

This is a sensible and patriotic plan. Peterborough will fall in line. Do all you can but do it now.

THE LOCAL OR CONTINGENT RELIEF SIDE OF THE PETERBOROUGH PATRIOTIC FUND is for the purpose of Aiding Families who may be in need owing to the war, through lack of work. There are many such and will be more. They must be judiciously aided and not want.

We are face to face with the realities of war, more dreadful than we at home yet understand, but imagination needs no help in picturing what the war means to the women and children whose natural protectors have been taken from them.

With rent to be paid—with winter coming and no fuel in the house—with the little children crying for warm clothing—with foodstuffs rising in price, war is, indeed, carried to the very hearthstones, unless WE DEFENDERS AT HOME stand in the way.

Don't Fail to attend the Big Patriotic Fund Mass Meeting in the Opera House, Tuesday, Dec. 8th. There will be magnificent addresses by Hon. W. T. White, Minister of Finance, Ottawa; and Rev. Father Minehan, Toronto—In Aid of the Movement.

Does a logical presentation of a good investment interest you? Do you believe there is an oil in commercial quantities in Alberta? If you are alive to the situation you do. Then it will pay you to investigate our proposition and our holdings.

Please Read Carefully and Note!

THAT Oil authorities are agreed, the Alberta Oil Field is of an anticlinal formation. It has been fairly accurately ascertained in what general direction these anticlines run. Geologist D. W. Dunn chose wisely in the selection of the now famous Monarch well. WINDSOR OILFIELDS, LIMITED, has holdings located close to the Monarch.

THAT Cunningham Craig, one of the world's most eminent geologists, selected the site of the Mowbray-Berkeley well. Stock in that company is not offered at any price. We possess acreage adjoining the Mowbray-Berkeley (Section 12, Township 23, Range 5, West of 5th). If a strike is made at the Mowbray-Berkeley what will shares in our company be worth?

VARIATIONS IN MILK FAT

They Show That Cows Should be Tested at Frequent Intervals

Frequent experiments have shown that one single test of a cow's milk is not reliable as an indication of what percentage of fat her milk normally contains. A great many well known causes affect the test, also some causes that are unknown at present even by the closest students. This "variation in the test" is one of the puzzles of the cow's individuality, and because of these puzzling variations it is advisable to take composite samples at intervals so as to ascertain the average test.

Some painstaking investigations at one of the dairy research stations in England, with seven cows for two days, even covering such details as a separate test of eleven successive pints, three times a day, from the four quarters of the udder, shows that while thirty pounds of milk per day was 3.6 per cent., the variation was all the way from only six-tenths of one per cent. up to nine and a half per cent. of fat.

This is clear proof of how misleading one single test may be. If the real earning capacity of each individual cow is to be computed, it must be on the basis of her annual production of milk and fat less the cost of food; regular weighing and testing give that knowledge which every factory patron should have of each cow he keeps.

The Sheep Pays

Money invested in sheep will nearly double itself in one year, since the fleece will pay for the feed and care of the sheep, and the lambs, often two per ewe, are the profit. It is estimated that ten sheep may be kept where one cow may, and the risk is much less. It may be said that the sheep always carries her pocketbook with her. If she dies, her pelt or fleece pays her funeral expenses. If she lives, her wool in the spring and her lambs in the fall pay double revenue. No other stock pays as large a percentage of clear profit on the money invested. Nothing else will build up a rundown farm as quickly as a flock of sheep. While pasturing, the sheep's manure is distributed about so evenly that no manure spreader could equal the sheep in its work.

Poultry Industry

The value of the poultry industry to New Zealand was stated at a conference of poultrymen to be two millions sterling per annum, this sum changing hands for products, produce and materials in order to keep the industry going. The average price of eggs and table poultry was fully 50 per cent. higher than it was ten years ago. Five years ago they could count on one hand the number of persons engaged in poultry farming for a living. Now they could be numbered by the score, [illegible], were giving poultry their attention, since they were realizing that the high prices [illegible] for eggs and table birds [illegible] the keeping of poultry a valuable adjunct to farm pursuits.

THE RIGHT WAY TO STRIKE A MATCH.

Once in a while we have complaints about our matches breaking in two. This is no fault of the Match, as EDDY'S MATCHES are made from specially selected straight-grained wood only. For the benefit of those who are still in ignorance of the proper way to hold a match (and there are many) we give the following rule:—

"The forefinger of the right hand should be placed"
"over the tip of the match and withdrawn quickly"
"when the flame comes. This prevents any undue"
"leverage on the match, and instinct prevents one"
"getting ones finger burned."

RACETRACK ROGUES IN THE OLD COUNTRY

Swindling Operatives Who Happily Have Few Counterparts in the Dominion

The racecourse is notoriously a happy hunting-ground for thousands of scheming rogues, who visit the principal race meetings with the sole intention of relieving the unsophisticated sportsman of his money by fair means or unfair—mostly unfair, says a writer in the Glasgow Herald. Some of the schemes are undoubtedly clever, but others again are as old as the hills, and it is really surprising to find a public gullible enough to swallow them.

A common piece of thick tape, about two feet long and half an inch wide, is doubled up and folded round like a catherine-wheel. The operator then places it upon a table, and bets the eager onlookers odds of three to one that they cannot insert a pointed skewer in one of the loops so as to retain the garter when he pulls it. As there are about thirty similar loops visible, it is small wonder that the proprietor very rarely has to pay up.

This swindle is usually well watched by pick-pockets, as they have a splendid chance of plying their trade amongst the players.

The Race-table Swindle

The numerous race-tables scattered all over most racing grounds have an irresistible attraction for many would-be sports. Painted upon these tables are presumed likenesses of the various horses engaged in the big race for the day, and in the centre of the table is a revolving spindle.

The gentleman in charge of the gaming apparatus bets odds against the spindle stopping at any particular one of the various colored racers. His confederates stand around, and, by their remarkable luck in backing long-priced winners time after time, induce outsiders to bet heavily.

The backers never win, as the cunning race-game swindler has more than one artifice by which he can slow down the pointer to any horse he chooses.

"Welshers," or bogus-bookmakers, swarm at probably every racetrack course in the United Kingdom and they always work with half-a-dozen or more confederates who pretend to place bets with them.

Innocent Victims

When the welsher realizes that it is about time for him to disappear, a common practice is to offer his high stool to a spectator, "the better to see the race run," as he suavely puts it. Many a simpleton has had to run for dear life after availing himself of such an offer.

During the Derby won by Diamond Jubilee a welsher, about to depart for pastures new, offered his stool to a countryman standing near, who instantly jumped at the offer. He also obligingly held the bookmaker's satchel, which it is needless to say, was innocent of money. Then the welsher bolted, and the backers of Diamond Jubilee nearly killed the guileless yokel ere he was rescued by a body of police, his clothes being torn to shreds.

The Racecourse Sharper

For real cleverness, magsmen, or "tale-tellers" as they are termed in the picturesque vernacular of the turf, are undoubtedly entitled to the blue ribbon of racing swindles.

A sharper of this type is an unerring judge of character, and it does not take him long to pick out a "mug," as the youth with more money than brains is known.

When thoroughly in his victim's confidence, the sharper, as a huge favor, tells him there is a great system of backing horses in existence, of which he—the sharper—is the sole inventor, and if Mr. Simple has any spare cash to invest he has a chance of making a small fortune. At first the poor victim is allowed to win a little; but gradually all the money of which he is possessed finds its way into his affable friend's pocket.

KING OF UMPIRES

Gaffney Brought Arbitrator's Work up to Modern Pitch

While John H. Gaffney, who died at his home in Worcester recently, was known as the king of umpires, he was not the first arbitrator to be honored by that title, writes Old Sport Hough in the Philadelphia Inquirer. Honest John Kelly was the original king of umpires, although it always was a question whether he was really the best of the umpires of his time. But there was one honor no one could take from him. When he was operating, he was the boss of the field, and that was long before the umpires were clothed with the almost autocratic power they are to-day. And then, think of the mobs he had to face in those days. Compared with them the most turbulent of present-day crowds are mild and orderly. But, no matter how tough the going was, nothing seemed to bother Kelly, who, on one occasion, hopped the fence in order to get at his tormentors in the right field bleachers. Gaffney, though, was the originator of modern umpiring. He was the first man to go behind the pitcher when there was a runner on, he was always over the play, and was the first umpire the Old Sport can recall who made it a point to be both blind and deaf at times.

ABOUT WOOD-FILLERS

The Man Who Works About the Home Needs This Information

Open-grained woods require paste filling, being "hard woods." The varieties most in use are ash, beech, butternut, baywood, black walnut, chestnut, elm, mahogany, oak and rosewood.

Close-grained woods such as bass, cedar, redwood, gum, poplar, spruce and whitewood are filled with liquid fillers, being soft woods.

There is another group of woods that occupy an intermediate place, though they might properly be classed with the close-grained woods, namely, birch, cherry, circassian walnut and maple. They are sometimes filled with paste filler, sometimes with liquid filler.

Chestnut and some oaks are very open-pored and not only require filling but often two fillings and a stiff paste. The purpose of the paste filler is to fill up the openings in the tissue of the wood, the liquid part of the filler saturating the tissue and so to some extent preventing the wood robbing the varnish coat and occasioning pinholing, etc. For this purpose it is best to sometimes apply a coat of liquid filler over the paste filling, and in some instances another coat of paste filler over the liquid is best. In any case the idea is to form a hard and impermeable foundation for the varnish coats that are to follow.

A filler should be colored to match the wood; but should be made a shade or so darker. The following is a very good formula for making a paste filler: Mix two parts of best coach japan and three parts of raw linseed oil, both by weight. To this liquid add enough finely pulverized silica to form a stiff paste. The mass needs to be thoroughly mixed.

A white liquid filler is sometimes desirable, and the following is a good one. In one gallon of raw linseed oil put two pounds of pale powdered resin, and place in a suitable vessel on the stove until the resin has melted, stirring meanwhile. Then remove from the fire and add one pint of white japan drier and two quarts of turpentine; stir well, then set aside to cool; when cold, stir in eight ounces of corn starch. After which thin with turpentine and pass it through a strainer.

ARTIFICIAL PEARLS

Most of Them Merely Glass Balls With Lustrous Coating Inside

The industry of manufacturing artificial pearls has developed enormously of late years, both in extent and in the remarkable degree of perfection which these imitations of the natural gem have attained, some of them almost defying detection save under the close scrutiny of the keenest experts.

The simplest forms are uniformly spherical and are merely glass balls blown by means of tubes of varying sizes. More ingenious and more natural-looking are the irregular pearls or perles goitreuses. To produce these the workman sometimes merely touches the ball momentarily with the end of a redhot tube, thus melting the glass at the point of contact and drawing it out irregularly. In other cases he touches one spot or another of the ball to a flame, at the same time blowing gently in the tube. The ball is pierced by two holes, one of which is caused by the breath of the workman, and the other by the hollow in the tube at the moment when this is detached from the pearl by means of a slight tap.

These balls are then merely coated inside with a preparation known as "essence of the Orient." This, despite its elaborate title, consists merely of pure water holding in solution the scales of the little fish known as the bleak-fish. The operation consists in the sucking of the liquid into a tube drawn out to a fine point and then blowing it into the glass bead, which is then given a rotary motion to spread the coating evenly.

The beads when coated are placed in a sieve whose bottom is covered with parchment and shaken incessantly till dry. Finally they are filled with wax so as to be less fragile and a little heavier.

INCONSPICUOUS CLOTHING

Dark Blue and Green Can be Seen the Farthest

Some curious and rather unexpected results have followed experiments in Europe for the purpose of determining what color in a soldier's uniform is the least conspicuous to an enemy. Of ten men, two were dressed in light grey uniforms, two in dark grey, two in green, two in dark blue, and two in scarlet. All were then ordered to march off, while a group of officers remained watching them. The first to disappear in the landscape was the light grey, and next, surprising as it may seem, the scarlet. Then followed the dark grey, while the dark blue and the green remained visible long after all the others had disappeared. Experiments in firing at blue and red targets, according to these experiments, proved that blue could be more easily seen at a distance than red.

SIZES OF SILOS

Depend Upon Amount of Silage Required—How to Determine

The amount of silage required and the size of silo needed to hold it can be quite closely calculated provided the number and kind of animals to be fed from it are known before building.

An average cow or beef animal may be fed about thirty-five pounds of silage per day and the usual period during which silage is used in this latitude will be about 210 days. Large animals, or those that are being fattened, may consume considerably more than thirty-five pounds per day, but this has been found a fair average.

In a silo of ordinary depth, the average weight of the silage is about forty pounds per cubic foot. Near the top of the silo, however, where the pressure is not great, it will weigh only twenty-five pounds per cubic foot, while at the bottom of a thirty-five foot silo it may weigh sixty pounds. Taking these averages, if a cow eats thirty-five pounds of ensilage in a day, she will eat thirty-five fortieths, or seven-eighths, of a cubic foot per day; and with this as a basis it is easy to determine the number of cubic feet of ensilage required to feed a cow or any number of cows throughout the season. The diameter of the silo must be such that the stock on hand can use one or two inches of silage off the top each day during the winter and at least three inches per day when summer feeding of silage is to be practised. This is necessary to keep the silage from spoiling.

A silo ten feet in diameter is adapted to feeding ten mature cattle. One twelve feet in diameter will feed fifteen head, and one fourteen feet in diameter will meet the needs of twenty head; but if there are thirty or more cows to feed a sixteen-foot silo should be erected. These silos should be thirty or forty feet, or even more in height.—A. D. Wilson.

IMPROVED BROILER

Revolves on Pivot and Meat Can be Done on Either Side

An improved type of broiler for gas ovens has been invented. It can be moved up and down in the oven and turned about so that the meat is done equally on both sides. The broiler proper is pivoted to a framework that moves up and down in grooves on the inside end walls of the oven. By a lever outside this framework is operated. Like most broilers it is in two hinged sections that receive the meat between them. When they are locked the device can be revolved at will. A removable drip pan sets in the lower portion of the framework to catch the drippings from the steak, or chops, or whatever the meat may be. The advantage of being able to move the broiler up and down is that you can get it close to the flame or some distance off, according to whether you want it done quickly or slowly.

ORIGIN OF PAINTS

Ground up Mummies Furnish a Beautiful Brown Color

In order to furnish the innumerable delicate tints of paint required by artists, manufacturers have nowadays to ransack the world. Even mummies are called into use. Mummies are usually preserved in the finest bitumen, and this ancient bitumen has, in the course of centuries, turned the mummies a leathery-brown tint. It has been found that when the bitumen and the shreds of mummy are ground down by machinery, a beautiful brown pigment is the result—exactly the tint required for painting certain shades of brown hair.

Sepia is one of the commonest of artists' paints. It is a deep brown in color, and comes from a source equally strange. It is prepared from the black, inky fluid discharged by the cuttle-fish to blind and baffle its enemies.

Raw sienna is soil from near Sienna in Italy. Burnt sienna, another common tint, is simply the same earth burnt.

The majority of pigments for making colors—that is, the dry powder—are obtained from minerals, but many pigments come from the animal kingdom. Cochineal, for example, comes from the dried bodies of insects. A kind of [illegible] is also used for certain pigments.

MARVELLOUS FEATS OF TRAINED PIGEONS

High-flyers Which Stay up in the Air For Eighteen Hours And Even Longer

To tell the uninitiated that pigeons will fly for over eighteen hours at a stretch, without food, water, or a rest, is probably to find oneself accused of pandering to one's imagination. Yet such is the astounding truth. Amongst the birds of those who make a hobby of breeding and training pigeons to fly for long periods among the clouds, specimens which regularly fly the clock around are to be numbered by the thousand. Week in, week out, in the districts where high-flying—the name by which the pastime is known—is followed, pigeons leave their aviaries at the break of day, go right up into the blue almost beyond the vision of the human eye, and remain flying there until the light fails in the evening. It is, in fact, by no means uncommon for them to keep up their aerial evolutions until darkness comes on, and the owner cannot see the birds of which he is so justly proud.

Somersaults in the Air

The variety of pigeon which flies the longest time is the Flying Tippler, and consequently it is the most popular. Other flying breeds are the Cumulet, the West of England Tumbler, the Performing Tumbler, and the Roller. The two last-named perform in the air as they fly, the Tumbler tumbling and the Roller rolling. The actions of the latter are most peculiar. A Roller will stop in its flight and turn somersaults downwards in an almost perpendicular line, sometimes actually striking the ground and injuring itself.

Thousands of English working men find recreation in the sport of high-flying. The great centre of the sport is Sheffield, which is as much the headquarters of the hobby as Newmarket is of the racing world.

Many clubs exist throughout England and these bodies organize the sport and promote the flying competitions.

How Contests Are Conducted

The manner of conducting these contests, briefly described, is as follows. A time is fixed by the club for the birds to start. This is as early as possible, say 3.30 a.m. or 4 a.m. An official referee is sent to each competitor's home to take the time, and see that the conditions of the fly are properly carried out. The referee remains until the birds drop. At the liberation hour the owner allows his "kit" of birds, usually three in number, to leave their loft. The pigeons, revelling in their liberty, immediately soar aloft, and commence flying with an easy, graceful action. Although they do not usually go very far out of sight of their home, they cover quite a wide area, flying backwards and forwards and round and round.

The conditions usually are that the "kit" has to be seen by the referee once in the first two hours of the fly, and once in each subsequent hour.

Calling the Pigeons Home

When the birds show signs of coming down, the owner puts out what is known as the "droppers." This is usually a white pigeon of some other variety—a white Fantail, for instance. When this bird appears on the loft top the high-fliers see it, and if they have been properly trained they fly down to their aviary, though it sometimes takes hours to get flying pigeons to "drop." The referee records the time up to the moment at which the owner puts out the "droppers." The pigeons have all to "drop" within a prescribed area, and within a fixed length of time, or they are disqualified.

The world's record fly is eighteen hours thirty-two minutes and there are many proud owners whose birds have stayed aloft for eighteen hours.

CORN ON THE FARM

Becoming More Popular Everywhere—Easy to Grow and Harvest

Corn farming is becoming very popular among the farmers of both eastern and western Ontario.

I was talking to an experienced farmer, and he told me that there was less labor in caring for ten acres of corn than in caring for three acres of roots, says T. S. Milady in Canadian Countryman.

As soon as the ground is well cultivated, drills in which to sow the roots have to be made. It is much easier and much quicker to take an ordinary corn planter and sow ten acres of corn than to make the drills and sow three acres of roots.

Later when the time for weeding comes, the roots have to be thinned very carefully and the weeds cut out, while the weeds alone have to be taken from the corn field. This, indeed, is a decided advantage by way of saving time, for ten acres of corn can be scuffled and hoed thoroughly in four days, while three acres of roots could not be attended to in that time.

In the fall, ten acres of corn can be cut into the silo in less than one day. This, of course, is done by the farmer with the aid of his neighbors. If that same farmer had roots instead of corn, he would not think of asking his neighbors to help him take them off. Instead, he would spend two days at least in getting the root crop into the root house.

A BRONCHIAL COUGH, PERHAPS WEAK THROAT; USE "CATARRHOZONE"--DEAD SURE CURE

Wonderful Success Reported in Thousands of Bad Cases.

How many thousands are there who would gladly pay any sum to be cured of bronchitis or catarrh. More could be cured if they would just use common sense in selecting their remedy.

Bronchitis of course is an inflammation of the bronchial tubes which were made for the passage of air alone, and neither the mixtures of an atomizer nor the liquid of a cough syrup can get where the trouble really is. The diseased parts can only be reached by a remedy that can force its way through all the breathing organs. Doctors who have used "Catarrhozone" say it is the only rational cure for bronchitis. It cures by inhalation.

Simple to use, delightful and pleasant—nothing compares with Catarrhozone which is the cure of the day for all bronchial and throat troubles.

Mr. H. B. McLaughlin, the well-known representative of Perrin and Blackwell, Toronto, says: "I have used Catarrhozone for years and can honestly say it is the only remedy that relieves me from a painful attack of Bronchial Catarrh. The inhaler for Catarrhozone is always in my pocket and I simply couldn't get along without it. I firmly believe Catarrhozone is a wonderful remedy."

Large size sufficient for two months' use, guaranteed, $1.00; small size 50c; sample or trial size 25c. Sold by dealers everywhere.

AN EASY WAY TO STOP HEAD NOISES

Good Advice For Those Who Fear Deafness

Men and women who are growing hard of hearing and who experience a steady feeling of pressure against their ear drums, accompanied by buzzing, rumbling sounds in their head like water falling or steam escaping should take prompt and effective measures to stop this trouble. Head noises are almost invariably the forerunners of complete or partial deafness and most deaf people suffer from them constantly. Sometimes these head noises become so distracting and nerve racking, with their never ceasing "hum" they drive the sufferer almost frantic and complete nervous breakdown and even violent insanity have been known to result.

Thanks to a remarkable scientific discovery made recently in England it is now possible to almost instantly lessen the severity of these head noises and in a very short time to completely and permanently overcome them. With the disappearing of the head noises, the hearing also greatly improves and very frequently can be restored to normal. This English treatment is known as Parmint and can be easily and safely self-administered at home. Leading druggists in Peterborough and vicinity now have it in stock. Get from your druggist 1 oz. Parmint (Double Strength) and mix it at home with ¼ pint of hot water and 4 oz. of granulated sugar. Stir until dissolved and then take one tablespoonful four times a day until the noises disappear and hearing improves. Parmint is used double strength in this way not only to reduce, by tonic action, the inflammation and swelling in the Eustachian tube and thus to equalize the air pressure on the drum but to correct any excess of secretions in the middle ear and the results it gives are both remarkably quick and effective.

IMPORTANT.—In ordering Parmint always specify that you want double strength; your druggist has it or he can get it for you; if not, send 75c to the International Laboratories, 74 St. Antoine st., Montreal, P.Q. who make a specialty of it.

Father McColl Honored.

Yesterday afternoon a pleasing function was held at St. Mary's School. The children had a most pleasing and elevating concert. During the proceedings Rev. Father McColl, who exchanges the Rectorship of St. Peter's for that of the new church of the Immaculate Conception in the East Ward was presented by the little girls attending the Convent with a handsome oak hatrack. Miss Kathleen Burke made the presentation. The Father showed visible signs of emotion when the presentation was made.

Germans Give Up Hope of Breaking Allies Line In the East the Foe is Hard Pressed—Allies Moving Irresistibly Forward in The West

RUSSIANS HAVE HURLED BACK THE GERMANS OVER TWENTY MILES

Ten Thousand German and Austrian Prisoners of War in Fortress of Kiff Total Number of Prisoners Captured by Russians in Recent Big Battle, 2,500 Officers and 130,000 Men—Russian Official Statement Does Not Claim Complete Victory Yet

London, Eng., Dec. 6.—Ten thousand Austrian and German prisoners arrived at the Russian fortress of Kiff on Wednesday of this week. Reports from Petrograd received here to-day state that 120,000 Austro-German soldiers and 2,000 officers made prisoners by the Russians have passed through Kiff since the war began. The fortress is declared to be crowded to its utmost capacity with the Austrians and Germans taken during the operations in Galicia and in southern Poland. The Russian official statement of to-day while claiming no complete victory, indicates that the Germans have been swung back twenty miles at one important point in their main line of advance toward Warsaw. Desperate fighting is now in progress along the main road between Lowicz and Lodz. Glovno, mentioned in the official despatch is being in the line of the fighting front, is about half way between these two points. The official statement therefore indicates that the Germans have not been driven from Lowicz, the outermost point reached in their advance, but with this town as a pivot, have been swung back twenty miles from Skierniewice upon Glovno, directly west.

The Germans continue to hold the left bank of the Vistula. The Russians, however, are making determined efforts to cross the river and this would mean a serious thrust at the German line of communications. The Germans maintain a wedge in the Russian lines, with Lowicz as the apex, but the front has evidently been extended by the Russian attack.

The German brigade over the western road toward Lodz and Piotrkow and the general development of the campaign has resulted in a zig-zag battle line.

The claims of thousands of prisoners captured, made by both sides, appear probable owing to the great extent of the battle front and the possibilities of cutting off detachments owing to the interlocking of the allies at some points.

ANOTHER DROWNING IN TRENT CANAL

The Otonabee River, through its tributary or adjunct, the Trent canal, has got another victim within its voracious jaws. On Saturday morning Lawrence Pammett, 12-year-old son of Robert J. Pammett, 272 Euclid Avenue, was drowned when skating on the canal. Though in the water less than five minutes, life was extinct when he was pulled out. A sister 10 years old, who was with him, barely missed sharing a similiar death, she being rescued.

The ice was very thin. The water is about seven feet deep. The cries of the drowning children attracted the attention of three men nearby, named Albert Curtis, L. Kemp and Samuel Edwards, who rushed to the rescue. The girl was first extracted from the icy embrace of the water. The boy was then got out. However, when Dr. Brown arrived the boy had died, evidently due to shock.

Messrs. Bellingham and Son have charge of the funeral.

Battle Lines of the Allies Have Been Considerably Advanced

Paris, Dec. 6.—The allies have further advanced their lines in Belgium and Northern France on the western end of the battle line, and also in the Argonne, where desperate fighting is reported in the official communique from the war office to-day. A position between Dixmude and Ypres, long contended for by the opposing armies, has been taken and held in the face of counter attacks by the Germans. North of the Lys, two lines of trenches have been captured and similar gains have been made in the Argonne. Rheims is again bombarded. The statement declares:

"Sensible progress has been made north of the Lys, the infantry taking two lines of trenches in an attack at daylight.

"A position between Dixmude and Ypres, disputed for a month has been taken and held despite the enemy's artillery.

"Rheims was severely bombarded yesterday.

"In the Argonne the fighting was extremely hot. The French took several trenches and maintained the points already won."

The gain reported north of the Lys is only slightly over a quarter of a mile, but that made between Ypres and Dixmude is nearly [illegible].

Cannonading is reported at intervals throughout the Arras region and the Champagne district. Calm continues in Lorraine and Alsace, the communique says.

[illegible], Dec. 6.—The strong French offensive along the entire front in Verdun to Alsace, has developed in the last three days, until it has become an engagement of greater importance than the battle in Flanders, because of the greater possibility of a decided success.

The advance of the French upon Altkirch which was reported on Thursday, came soon after the bombardment of Arnaville, and was followed by an advance of infantry in the general direction of Metz.

It is believed that none of the movements of the German troops in Belgium, which have been reported from Holland recently, has been in the direction of Alsace, instead of to Poland, as the resistance with which the Germans are meeting the French advance proves that they have made preparations to oppose any offensive action there.

A despatch from Basle, Switzerland, received by way of Berlin, states that the Germans are flooding territory in the vicinity of Strassburg, as though in preparation for a defence of that city.

HEAR THE PATRIOTIC SPEECHES IN GRAND OPERA HOUSE TUESDAY NIGHT

Oriental Hotel Will Make a Subscription of Fifty Cents per Guest to Peterboro Patriotic Fund—Rules Governing the Canvassing of the City for Subscriptions—Great Britain Should be Assured That Every Canadian is Supporting Empire's Cause

The Committees of the Patriotic Fund are seriously bent on pushing the fund up to high-water mark.

There is a deal to arrange. The team Captains were on hand and made report of selections and that the teams were well organized. The Publicity Committee had some things to say as to the program of that end of the week. With the help that is offered all details will be in smooth running order for the active days of the campaign.

It is desired that as many people as possible shall hear the speakers on Tuesday night next. It is felt that the Opera House will be thronged. There is no doubt that when such able speakers as Hon. W. T. White, Minister of Finance, Rev. Father Minehan and Lieut. Col. Ponton, deliver addresses it is more than a treat to hear them. The Committee are making, in anticipation of a full house, arrangements that an overflow meeting may be held in the Market Hall. This would afford opportunity for those who might not get to the Opera House in time to hear the speakers. But of this further announcement will be made.

The Oriental Hotel comes forward to join as an institution in the ranks of those who are really doing something. That is what it needed. Hearty work by all will land the Fund at the top. For a time not stated, and it may go on for a considerable time, the hotel will make a subscription to the Fund of fifty cents for every guest who patronizes the hotel. The regular rates will be charged, and these are ever reasonable. The sum mentioned is a gift from the hotel and will run into a considerable amount, which is what is needed. The hotel will make an announcement of its plan.

Following is a sheet of rules which are being issued for the use of the canvassers. The [illegible] used are such as should appeal to the citizens and it would be well to look the paragraphs over, in anticipation of the visit of the canvassers:

Some good reasons why I am subscribing to the Peterborough Patriotic Fund, to the extent of my ability—

1. I owe to my country and to the Empire of which we are a part, either to fight myself, or help to make it possible for others to fight in this supreme struggle.

2. As a Canadian I have enjoyed the protection and privileges of British Citizenship and have never yet been called upon in the defence of the Empire.

3. I have paid no war tax. My Mother Country has borne the burden of my protection alone.

. In this hour of trial I desire Great Britain to realize that every Canadian is supporting and upholding her cause."

5. The war in which we are engaged is a righteous cause, a struggle for truth, liberty and for the sacredness of treaties and the given word.

6. I can't go myself but I can help to make it possible for others to go by guaranteeing that their families will be provided for in their absence.

7. Every soldier who has gone from Canada is as truly my representative as he who went from Peterboro.

8. The object of the Canadian Patriotic Fund is to make provision for all families of soldiers going from Canada to take part in the present war.

9. I know I am subscribing to a fund that will assist the family whose breadwinner is out of work in Peterborough, and at the same time provide relief for the family whose breadwinner has answered his country's call.

10. Those who have gone to the front are making greater sacrifices than anything I can do at home.

11. An unparalleled crisis in the world's history calls for supreme sacrifice on my part. I must do my duty. I must fight or pay.

This morning Mr. O'Connell received a letter from Hon. W.T. White, saying that he would be pleased to be at Peterborough and speak at the [illegible]

THE KAISER ABANDONS HOPE OF VICTORY AND REUTURNS TO BERLIN

Lodz the Scene of Most Tragic Moment of Fighting in the War—The Bloodiest and Most Pitiful Battle Since War Was Declared, Fighting Lasted 36 Hours, and the Germans Fell in Rows—Comrades Pushed Forward Over Fallen Troops

New York, Dec. 6.—A Herald cable from London this morning says: "The return of the Kaiser to Berlin yesterday is regarded here as a sure indication that German expectations of an early success in Poland have been effectually blocked. The Kaiser, who will make only a brief stop at the capital has been on the eastern battlefield for nearly a week, and it is assumed that he would have remained to witness of the victory of his troops had one been in prospect.

Slaughtered the Foe Pitilessly.

Petrograd, via London, Dec. 6.—The most tragic moment of the fighting about Lodz thus far, it is reported here, occurred between Tuszyn and Brzeziny, southeast of Lodz. Heavy German forces which had penetrated to Tuszyn, it appears, were surrounded and obliged to fight their way to Brzeziny to unite with the main body. The Russians essayed counter attack after counter attack to prevent a junction, but the Germans cut a passage through at the point of the bayonet for a distance of 15 miles.

This battle is called the bloodiest and most pitiless fight of the war. Ninety per cent. of the German officers were put out of action and many of the regiments had less than one hundred men left. The fighting lasted for 36 hours. The Germans fell in rows, but their comrades pushed forward over their bodies and hurled themselves against the Russians.

Berlin, via wireless to London, Dec. 6.—The continuance of the allies offensive in Flanders was admitted in the official war office statement today. It says that the French attacks were repulsed. The operations in Poland continue to progress normally.

PATRIOTIC ENTERTAINMENT IN ZION HUGE SUCCESS IN EVERY WAY

A Patriotic Entertainment was given by the School children of school section thirteen, Otonabee, in the Forester's Hall, Zion, on Friday evening. The occasion was very largely attended, the building being packed to the doors; in fact standing room was at a premium. The entertainment consisted of tableaux, fancy drills to musical accompaniment, dialogues, and vocal and instrumental numbers, the whole of which presented the best entertaining event given in the township. The efforts of the little folk elicited intermittent and demonstrative approval from their audience, who showered upon the performers unstinted applause. Too much credit cannot be offered Miss Hamilton, the teacher of the school, for her time and patience in training her scholars for the production of a really clever programme, which reflected considerable talent on the part of both instructress and participants. Miss Hamilton, the school and the township are also to be congratulated upon the exceedingly generous and acceptable co-operation of Miss Donohoe, the Separate school teacher, whose cheerful activities both in preparing and assisting in the programme, added considerably to the success of the evening. Miss Donohoe was responsible for the fancy drills, which were executed in a charming manner. Mr. Joshua Smithson, J.P., and License Commissioner for East Peterborough, made a very capable chairman of the proceedings, and he entered into the spirit of the occasion in a most appropriate manner. The entertainment netted $61.30, which goes to Otonabee's Patriotic Relief Fund.

GOOD WORK BY THE LADIES.

The ladies of this district of Otonabee meet every Thursday evening, when they knit socks and caps for our soldier boys and make quilts and other articles for the relief of the distressed Belgians. Mrs. Thos. Greystock is president of this organization, Miss Rutherford, Treasurer, and Mrs. John Collins, Secretary. The Times tenders congratulations to Otonabee for the loyal spirit in which its people are entering to the needs created by the present war.

Blunders in Book Titles

Nothing so taxes the ingenuity of the bookseller as phonetic endeavors to get at the name of a book. Who but a genius could conceive that by "Within or Outside the Pail" was meant "Beyond the Pale," or that by "The Forgotten Cigar" a customer meant "For God and the Czar"? Even Mr. Bullen would be puzzled by a reference to "Letters of the Cash Lock" for "The Cruise of the Cachalot." [illegible]

KING'S GALLERY OF HONOR

The King has expressed a desire to form a collection at Windsor Castle of portraits of the leading soldiers and sailors of his reign, and proposes to make a start in the direction by placing in position paintings of Field-Marshal Earl Roberts and Field-Marshal Earl Roberts and Field-ably Admiral of the Fleet Lord Fisher and Admiral Lord Charles Beresford. In cases where paintings of those whom His Majesty desires to add to this collection are not available, it is understood he will give orders for such to be prepared, bearing the cost from his Privy Purse. This is a project, it is understood, the King has long had in mind, and it has been suggested that the Waterloo Chamber would be the most suitable apartment for the collection.

Suppressing the Toothsome Winkle

"Yer fancied winkles and a pot 'o tea,

So Albert Chevalier used to sing years ago. But, alas! the humble winkle is threatened with banishment from the homes of the thousands who enjoy these delectable morsels on a Sunday afternoon. It is proposed in a Bill entitled The Weekly Rest Day Bill, now before the House of Commons, to stop the sale of everything after 10 a.m. on Sundays.

Should this Bill become law the winkle and shrimp merchant will be hard hit, for it is estimated that $170,000 of the $250,000 spent every year on winkles and shrimps in the wholesale markets represents the Sunday afternoon supply to the retailers. Therefore if the selling of winkles and shrimps on Sunday is stopped, the trade is practically extinguished.

That is why the London costermonger is not a little agitated at the moment, and why he is organizing a strenuous campaign in defence of the winkle and shrimp trade. And doubtless thousands who are fond of tea and shrimps will have something to say on the matter, for, as a prominent Billingsgate salesman points out, winkles and shrimps are mostly retailed by [illegible], costermongers, and small [illegible], and their customers are almost exclusively people of the poorer districts.

Longevity in County Antrim

During the course of a Local Government Board inquiry held at Ballyclare relative to making a closing order for Rashee graveyard, a great many claims for the right of interment were made on behalf of a large number of people aged over ninety years, and one person aged 104 years, all resident in the locality. In one case a man made a claim for himself and two sisters, all aged over ninety years, and for a third sister, whom he described as the "young one," whose age he gave as seventy-four years. In many cases evidence was given of four generations alive in the same family, and evidence of interment in the graveyard about sixteen years ago of a person who had reached the great age of 111 years.

Fresh Butter From Swamp

A firkin of fresh butter, which must have been made generations ago, was dug up in swampy ground at Ballinahove, Ireland. The firkin is about 2 feet in height, with a circumference of about 10 inches. It appears to have been scooped out of a tree trunk, and on its sides are a couple of handles with holes through them—probably for the purpose of holding cords, so that the firkin could be carried on the back. It contained about 22 pounds of butter, which was in a fair state of preservation.

FAMOUS PHRASES AND THEIR ORIGIN

Some Everyday Expressions Have Come Down to us From the Time of the Caesars

The average person probably does not know the origin of half the common phrases used in ordinary conversation.

No less a person than Cicero first made use of the expression, "While there's life, there's hope," in a letter he wrote to Atticus. "We are in the same boat" is not modern slang, but occurs in a letter written by Clement I., Bishop of Rome, to the Church of Corinth in the first century. This letter is still in existence.

"I never put off till to-morrow what I can do to-day," was Lord Chesterfield's explanation of how he managed to do so much work. "Whatever is worth doing at all is worth doing well," he wrote later in the famous "Letters to His Son."

Lord Eldon, Lord Chancellor of England during the first twenty-six years of the nineteenth century, continually mispronounced the name of Henry Brougham, afterward to be a successor in the Chancellor's office. Brougham objected to being called Broffam, and once, after Brougham had made a speech, Eldon, by way of apology, pronounced his name correctly and made a proverb, "New brooms sweep clean."

"No man is a hero to his valet" has been paraphrased by scores, from Madame de Cornuel, a witty Frenchwoman of the seventeenth century, to Dr. Johnson and Napoleon. The first record of it, however, is found in Plutarch, who states that when Hermodotus addressed a poem to Antigonous I., King of Sparta, hailing him as son of the sun and a god, the monarch replied, "My bodyservant sings me no such song."

The phrase "circumstances over which he has no control" was used by the Duke of Wellington in a letter concerning some affairs in which his son was mixed up, and with which he declined to interfere.

"Conspicuous by their absence" has been used on many occasions in modern oratory. It was first used by Tacitus in relating that in the funeral procession of Julia, niece of Cato, sister of Brutus, wife of Cassius, many of the images of the most famous families in Rome were seen, but "Cassius and Brutus shone pre-eminent because their images were not displayed."

"Nothing is certain but death and taxes," wrote Benjamin Franklin, stating that the Constitution of the United States was in operation and to all appearances would last.

"Those who live in glass houses should not throw stones," was said by James I. of England, when his favorite, the Duke of Buckingham, complained that a mob had broken his glass windows, which were at that time a luxury.

"Mind your P's and Q's" is said to have been taken from an old French phrase at the time of Louis XIV. A very low bow was in fashion, and the dancing master, instructing his pupils, would warn them to look out for the position of the feet and the movement of the head, lest their great wigs be disarranged. The French word for foot is pied. "Mind your pieds and queues," soon came to be transplanted into English, and abbreviated.

FORCE OF EXPLOSION

Amazing Freak of Gelignite in British Columbia

It seems incredible that an explosion could be of such force as to cause an ordinary steel rail to wrap itself twice around the trunk of a large tree; yet there was just such a result from the discharge of gelignite at Nanaimo, British Columbia. Twelve workmen lost their lives by this explosion. The rail was lying on the ground fully thirty feet from the spot at which the explosion occurred; yet it was lifted into the air, sent in the direction of the tree, and twisted round the trunk just as if it had been a piece of piano wire. It was so tightly wrapped about the trunk that it cut deeply into the green wood and caused great splinters to start out on all sides. The explosive responsible for this unique occurrence is one of the most powerful preparations known, composed of nitroglycerine, nitrocotton, sodium nitrate, sodium carbonate, and wood pulp.

How do Animals Know?

One of the mysteries still unsolved is that of the sense by which the lower animals become aware of the approach of earthquakes. For three or four days before the severe earthquake at Guadalajara, Mexico, the many parrots of the city showed great and unusual restlessness, and during the period of disturbance the increased cries of the birds gave warning of the nearness of the worst shocks. Rats, also, became alarmed, fleeing from the city before the earthquakes came. Supersensitiveness to faint shocks hardly gives satisfactory explanation, for modern seismographs are very sensitive, and it is quite unlikely that tremors too slight to be reckoned would be felt so strongly as to give alarm.—"Science Siftings."

Put on the Door of Vice the House-Owner's Name

By Winifred Black

Copyright, 1914, by Newspaper Feature Service, Inc.

Winifred Black

DR. JENKIN LLOYD JONES wants to have all property labelled with the owner's name—and then see what will happen.

"Put a brass doorplate with the owner's full name on it, on every house he owns, and things will begin to occur," says Dr. Lloyd Jones.

"Seventy-five per cent of the houses rented for saloons and other kindred purposes in Chicago are owned by respectable widows. Also," says Dr. Jones, "many of the other 25 per cent. are owned by people who would turn tail at the idea of going to the theatre on Sunday, or playing an innocent game of golf on the afternoon of the Sabbath.

"If a man is ashamed of his house and the use to which that house is put—let him sell it—or—let him keep his name on the door.

"No, I am not joking; I was never more serious in my life. I am tired of hypocrisy—tired of pretense—tired of the shifting of responsibility. I want to see some of the people who are to blame for some of the worst conditions in our city take some of that blame and do the best they can with it."

I wonder what would happen if they should carry out the door plate idea in Chicago—or anywhere else? I'd like to be there the first 24 hours that those doorplates went up. What a rushing business the steamship companies would do in tickets. And I'm afraid you couldn't get a drawing room in a Pullman car running out of that town for love nor money nor flattery nor anything there is that's human.

The Vice Above.

Wouldn't it be fun to see all the hurrying and scurrying, and to listen to all the excusings and apologizings and denyings?

"I hadn't the faintest idea—if I had ever suspected! Why, the very idea —I don't see how they ever made such a mistake! Me make my income in any such way as that! Why I'm president of the White Ribbon Club in my church!"

"And I have a dear little daughter—she's at one of the finest schools in the country; I've got to get her abroad, some way, before she gets a hint of this—she'd die of mortification. How could they bring such a blot upon her name—those other girls—the ones who were dragged down there—where my name is on the door! What are they to me—they are just creatures of the streets. Why should I be held responsible because they can't behave themselves?

"Why do I rent my property for such a purpose if I do not approve it? Well, I have to live—everything costs so much, too, and there's my son to be sent to college and my daughter to bring out in society. What do people expect me to do, live in a flat somewhere just to please these doorplate cranks? Why, they haven't any respect for any one any more; isn't it dreadful? Isn't it appalling what a hideous and ungrateful world we live in!"

Can't you hear them—all the little cowardly souls that never do anything right—if it takes courage and self-denial and honesty to do it? Can't you see them—all the smug hypocrites, all the self-satisfied Pharisees, hurrying and scurrying to get away from the plain, simple truth?

Isn't it Holmes who tells about the time that he sat in a green meadow and watched the flowers blossoming in the grass? A meadow lark sat on a bush by the path and whistled, and there was a nest in the grass, and in the nest were speckled eggs, and the earth was all strewn with stars, in the shape of flowers, and all the air was perfumed and all the world was spring.

And he who sat in the grass lifted a flat stone that had fallen there, and lo, the earth was gray with thousands of little slugs and worms and insects which lived under the flat stone in the dark and the dampness.

The Grubs Below.

"So it is when we lift the stone of a great corruption—what a scurrying there is of all the little insects which used to life under the stone," says Holmes—or something like it.

I keep thinking of the stone in the meadow and of the little fat, white slugs that fattened under the weight of its [illegible].

"We can stay as here under the [illegible] how lucky we are to live in such [illegible] the stone, and the sun [illegible] the fresh ground [illegible] to dry [illegible] and [illegible] and [illegible] the fat white worms who thought the great stone would hide them forever!

What a meddlesome [illegible] you are, Jenkin Lloyd Jones, never content to let well enough alone—what is it to you that some few favored ones [illegible] on the [illegible]?

Is it any of your business, pray, who's [illegible] rich on the proceeds of misery and despair?

What business is it of yours who owned the house where that young girl who killed herself was brought to degradation? Don't you know that the people who lived there pay an enormous rent—that [illegible] the house [illegible] other [illegible] you couldn't expect the owners to give up such an income as that, could you?

No—you don't expect that—you just ask that they take their share of the blame, just as they took their share, and more than their share, of the profits.

Make them put their name on the doorplate of that house? There, there, don't say another word. You're mad, Dr. Jones, stark, staring, raving mad—what else can you be and cherish such a notion as that?

How dare you try to lift the stone—Jenkin Lloyd Jones—and let in the light on the starved earth beneath! Don't you care at all what is going to become of the fat white grubs who live under it?

Useful Hints for the Housewife

By Ann Marie Lloyd

WHEN buying tea, before using it spread it on a sheet of paper and place it in a warm, but not too hot oven from 10 to 15 minutes. By doing this the tea will be made to go much farther, and the flavor will be greatly improved.

[illegible] be mistaken for a [illegible]

[illegible] looks decidedly [illegible] in your [illegible]

Jars and pickle bottles that smell of onions may be made sweet if filled with garden mold and left standing out of doors for two or three days. When thoroughly washed they will be found quite fresh, and may be used for jam or any other purpose.

Half a cupful of milk put in a dishtub full of hot water will serve instead of soap. It softens the water, keeps the hands better, because it will not roughen them like soap, and brightens dishes, cleaning off all grease and leaving no scum in the pan.

To remove grease from wall paper apply to the spots a paste made of fuller's earth and cold water, leaving this on all night. If the spots have not disappeared in the morning a second application will usually be found efficacious. It is well to take grease marks out of paper directly they are made.

Fasten a piece of tape or string to the end of your scrubbing brush so that when finished with, it can be hung up and allowed to drain, instead of the water soaking into the back and loosening the bristles and making them soft. For the same reason, do not leave the brush in the pail of water when the floor is being washed.

CUPID'S ADVENTURE : : By Michelson

Copyright, 1914, by Newspaper Feature Service, Inc. [illegible]

THOUGH he does so many and such extraordinary things, Cupid is by no means a reckless fellow. O, no! He plays safe for LOVE Cupid does. Don't be confused by the kind of tying that is often done in his name. The very fact that Love lasts—when it really is Love—ought to suggest that Cupid dodges strictly desperate chances. Notice that he is still on the job.

Thus he hates to be trifled with. Surf and sentiment may sometimes go together, but toying with love in the breakers is a hazardous matter. The sea is hazardous enough. Don't make the situation too complicated. Love has joined in many a sea rescue. But that's another game. Let HIM decide when to play it.

Peter's Adventures in Matrimony

By LEONA DALRYMPLE

Author of the new novel, "Diane of the Green Van," awarded a prize of $10,000 by Ida M. Tarbell and S. S. McClure as judges.

"The truth about 'the girl in the case' distinguishes this new series by Miss Dalrymple. Her character studies will not appear unfamiliar to the majority of readers, who will follow the fortunes of "Peter" with interest.

Mary Gets the Money.

LEONA DALRYMPLE

BUYING clothes on the instalment plan! It was new to me, and for the first time I realized the horrible cunning of those clothing sharks who play up the vanity of women.

Since my wife made her confession I have learned that there are places of this sort in every city, where silly women only buy finery that they cannot afford, and pay for it in small instalments. That they pay many dollars over the real value of things, they do not seem to realize. One fact stands prominently forth. They may sport that spectacular finery which they love, and the man who puts up for it does not suspect how insidiously he is being bled by the wife of his heart.

"A dollar a week!" I blurted to Mary. "That's utterly new to me."

"And such a nice man!" gushed Mary, mistaking my dazed incredulity for [illegible]. "He does treat me with such respect and deference. Indeed, one would think I was some great lady when I sweep into his store. Everybody jumps to wait on me, and they show me the best of everything. Always the best, Peter, never anything shoddy. It's really quite a tribute to my appearance, don't you think so?"

"It's a shame!" I said. "Fall down on your instalments once and see how deferentially he'll treat you. You'll find a claw under the velvet then, my lady."

And then—in a bewildering flash of indignation—I wondered where my wife got the money to pay her instalments.

"Mary," I said, "even yet I don't think this situation is fully explained. There hasn't been any money left to speak of since we adopted our new plan of paying bills. Where under heaven do you get the money to pay your instalments?"

Mary began to cry.

"If you don't borrow it from your mother," I insisted, "you must get it somewhere else."

I saw Mary glance furtively at me through her tears. I did not [illegible] my face to relent one iota of its [illegible], for I realized that I was face to face with a new problem.

"You never seemed to notice anything," Mary said after a while. "I—I didn't suppose you'd notice I was getting new clothes—and oh! Peter!"

"Yes," said I patiently, "you were to tell me where you got the money to pay the instalments."

Mary's wonderful eyes suddenly flashed defiance.

"Well, I have to have money, don't I?" she said.

"You have to have money," I agreed, "but also if you're going to have it, you have to economize and save it."

"I—I don't know how to economize. I —I simply can't do it."

"I'm still waiting to hear," I hinted, and the blood was pumping so violently through my veins that my temples throbbed horribly and my head ached.

"I—I got the grocer to give me money," burst forth Mary with a wild spasm of sobbing, "and—and then he puts a few extra pounds of coffee and tea and butter on the bill—he—he gives me a good deal that way—and——"

"Mary!" I cried, so hurt and horrified that I felt the color leaving my face. "You can't mean it!"

"I—I do," sobbed Mary. "Mrs. Patterson told me about it. She does the very same thing [illegible]. Then, whenever [illegible] from the drug store—I—I [illegible] it put on our bill and she [illegible]—and that way I [illegible] money all [illegible]. [illegible] so white and [illegible] dreadfully. I—I [illegible]. I—I had to have [illegible]. I—I had to have paints and things for my painting lessons. What else was I to do?"

I felt sick and discouraged.

Secrets of Health and Happiness

Why You Eat Energy Rather Than Mere Food

By Dr. LEONARD KEENE HIRSHBERG

A. B., M. A., M. D. (Johns Hopkins).

DR. HIRSHBERG

IF you eat to live, rather than live to eat, you should know how to augment your health, strength and, yes, even your reservoir of reserve funds. "Every [illegible]," says Athenaeus, "which is guided by principles of nature, fixes its ultimate aim entirely upon the gratification of the stomach."

"The discovery of a new dish," said Brillat-Savarin in his Physiology of Gout, "does more for the happiness of man than the discovery of a new star." Tell me what you eat and I'll tell you what you are. Burton, too, in his Anatomy of Melancholy, says as much valor is to be found in feasting as in fighting, and some of your city captains and carpet knights will make this good and prove it.

Victuals serve several ends to man. They afford growth and equilibrium to the living textiles. They serve as a defense against dangers and disease. They evolve energy, vigor, blood and heat. The mere elegance or tang that comes to the palate from provender of one kind or another has little to do with its sustaining value.

Food makes for the upkeep of your every little movement, as well as for your very breath. Indeed, your teeth could not chew, your saliva could not flow, your esophagus could not swallow and your stomach itself could not digest were it not for the very viands which you engulf.

Much more than muscular effort, however, is necessary from the victuals you swallow. The tissues need new growth and repair. Many of the choicest provisions, much of nature's best sustenance is woefully wanting in tissue creative capacity. Only albuminous foods—proteins with nitrogen in them—are able to perform this every day miracle, to wit, the construction of sinews, brawn, tendons, ligaments, blood and bone.

Save in the matter of a need for new tissues—a requisite of youth, vitality and perennial muscular waste—there is little need for such as have meat and strange foods. Work-making foods, those which yield force and energy, are independent of tissue-building proteins, sugars, starches, oils, fats, water and minerals. Of these various aliments in the average individual there is a quarter of a pound of sugar and starch, nearly 20 pounds of meat and albumens, 11 pounds of salty minerals, 100 pounds of water, five pounds of fats and oils.

Since as yet there is not one satisfactory unit of work to stand for what a grain of food can do, the unit of heat called a calorie is taken instead. One grain of starch or sugar or meat or legumin, or egg albumen or gluten yields a little over four of these units. Oils and fats in equal amounts yield nearly nine and a half such units.

Human pasturage, such as meat, milk and cheese have an abundance of food units of this kind, because they contain all sorts and conditions of edible chemicals. A pint of milk, or a pound of milk gives something over 300 units of heat, while cheese of the same weight yields more than seven times as much. Of course, in the stomach possibly little more than three-quarters of this is absorbed into the tissues as usable material.

Even when you sleep you lose in breathing and heart pulsations about [illegible] units of heat each hour. When you sit in your easy chair you lose a hundred units each hour. Thus for eight sleeping hours you must easily yourself with [illegible] of something between [illegible] units. As for a hard worker's day of toil, between [illegible] and [illegible] units are necessary.

IF the nails are not carefully watched and cared for in these outdoor months they will become hard, brittle and ugly. During the days at the seashore or lake the nails grow very dry and they need a little dab of cold cream each night to soften the flesh at the base of each nail. Before you start manicuring your nails the hands should be soaked in a bowl of warm water mixed with glycerine and a few drops of [illegible] water. [illegible] the [illegible] superfluous [illegible] should be pushed back in its place.

After the flesh has been pushed back so that the half-moons show the hands should be washed again in warm suds. A tiny particle of nail rouge may with advantage be touched to each finger, and the coloring matter rubbed with a good buffer until the nails are pretty and pink. By rubbing one of the little white [illegible] powder [illegible] the palm of the hand and passing the fingers over it with a swift motion, the nails gain a fine polish and make the fingers look as if tipped by [illegible].

Oatmeal is excellent for softening and whitening the hands. Mix some finely powdered oatmeal with water and spread on the skin in a paste. As it dries rub it off in flakes, removing the last traces with [illegible] water. An oatmeal bag may serve the purpose if one does not care to rub the flakes directly on the hands. Pour some of the raw oatmeal into a silk handkerchief, tie the four ends together at the centre and rub the bag over the hands when they are washed. The skin will become creamy white if the oatmeal treatment is faithfully followed.

Advice to Girls

By ANNIE LAURIE

Dear Annie Laurie:

There is a young man in the town who has just got a divorce from his deceitful wife. As far as I can hear the fault was all in his wife.

He is a fellow of about 24 or 25 and exceptionally good looking. Just lately he has been speaking and acting as though he might like to be in my company. Should I take up with this man?

"ANXIOUS."

HOW do you know that the fault is all in his wife, dear child; has he told you so?

There are always two sides to a story, you know, and I should certainly like to hear the other side, if I were you.

Haven't you any brothers who can hear it for you? It isn't quite the thing for a young girl to pay too much attention to such affairs, and what on earth do you mean, dear child, by saying you want to "take up" with the man?

Do you mean that you want to marry him, or that you just want him for a friend? You don't have to marry every man who's nice to you, you know—did you ever think of that?

I should be a little careful in this particular case if I were you.

Annie Laurie

Miss Laurie will welcome letters of inquiry on subjects of feminine interest from young women readers of this paper and will reply to them in these columns. They should be addressed to her, care of this office.

British Fleet is Defeating Germany

Admiral Mahan has died in the midst of a most vivid confirmation of his estimate of sea power. The British fleet is proving the really dominant factor in this war. It has swept the seas of German merchant shipping and in a few weeks more it will have swept the seas of German warships.

The destruction of a few British cruisers by German torpedo, mine, or gun-fire has been sensational in the highest degree, but it has not vitally affected the situation. Only one ship of the first-class has been lost, and at the end of the war the British Admiralty will have in commission fifteen new superdreadnoughts, to say nothing of light cruisers, destroyers and submarines.

The British people and their government took Admiral Mahan to heart. His warning was meant for them; they knew it. When Germany, having created a large mercantile marine essayed the building of a mighty navy the British were forewarned and prepared. They have outbuilt the Germans; they have kept in the lead; and their all-powerful navy is proving now the bulwark of the allied cause and the salvation of the British Empire.

If Germany is defeated the British fleet will do it, by the starvation of German industry and commerce. The trade never could be cut off without the British sea power, which holds Germany at bay exactly as in the last century it held Napoleon at bay, and makes a real invasion of the British Isles impossible.

When Will He "Stump Quebec"

Has anybody noticed Sir Wilfrid Laurier rushing up and down the Province of Quebec, preaching the gospel of Imperialism, pleading the cause of Britain, stirring up the people to fight in the Empire's war?

Surely somebody must have observed the white plume dashing from city to city, and from town to town, and from village to village, carrying the fiery cross, urging, exhorting, and persuading, spending his nights in travel and his days in earnest eloquent appeal to his fellow-countrymen to rally to the flag.

[illegible] that nobody [illegible] it. Can it be that these things have not taken place?

Everyone remembers that when the Conservative leaders in Parliament urged the Liberals under Laurier to recognize the existence of the German emergency and take some measures of practical aid to the Empire on the sea Sir Wilfrid announced that in the hour of Britain's need he would "stump Quebec."

Stumping Quebec as a measure of effective naval or military aid had never, up to that moment, been regarded with enthusiastic approval by experienced naval or military tacticians. When the importance of the proposal was made apparent the British Empire fely vastly relieved. If the Germans were marching through Belgium in an effort to attack England and France, and if German vessels were sinking refugee ships in the channel, Laurier would stump Quebec and the tide of battle would be rolled back.

And yet here is the war almost four months of age, and the stumping has not taken place. There have been, perhaps, two or three speeches, hardly a speech a month on the average. On the contrary, Sir Wilfrid Laurier spends most of his time in his office at Ottawa, communing with his Grit lieutenants on how to get out of the mess in which they find themselves.

Why isn't he stumping Quebec like a man, and thereby frightening the Kaiser out of his wits? Why let the war go on when all that is necessary is to carry out this Napoleonic strategy of stumping Quebec? Does he not owe it to the Empire and to civilization?

Sciatica Vanishes Instantly If Nerviline Is Used

CAN YOU BEAT THIS CASE?

No ordinary liniment will even relieve Sciatica. Nothing but the most powerful kind of a remedy can penetrate through the tissues and finally reach the Sciatic Nerve. You can always depend on the old-time "Nerviline." Nothing made to-day is as good for Sciatica as Nerviline was when first [illegible], about forty years ago. All this time the same old "Nerviline" has been curing Sciatica, Lumbago, Rheumatism and is considered to be without an equal in relieving pain or soreness anywhere. "'Nerviline' couldn't be made stronger or better," writes James E. Edwards. "The way it cures Sciatica is to me simply a miracle. For years I suffered frightfully. I ruined my stomach with internal dosing. I rubbed in gallons of oils and liniments—none were strong enough. One good rubbing with Nerviline relieved. I kept on rubbing and shortly was cured. My father cured rheumatism in his right arm and shoulder with Nerviline, and my mother cured herself of chronic lumbago with Nerviline. Our family simply swears by Nerviline and we are never without a 50c family size bottle in our home. We find that for external pain, for earache, colds, earache, such minor ills it is a veritable family physician."

Spaghetti

A quarter of a pound of spaghetti, a quarter of a pound of cheese (grated), two Spanish onions, pepper, salt, and a little milk. Into fast-boiling water throw the spaghetti, which should be broken into one-inch lengths. Cook till tender, drain in a colander, and put under the cold water tap for two or three minutes to prevent sticking together. Peel and boil onions till tender, and chop into small pieces. Mix spaghetti and onions together, season with pepper and salt to taste, and just cover with milk. Lay on the grated cheese to form a crust, and bake in a moderate oven until a golden brown—about thirty-five minutes in oven. This is a tasty and nourishing dish.

World's Busiest Depot

During the twenty-four hours no fewer than 2,130 trains pass through the Embankment Station, London, and each one stops there. That is absolutely a world's record.

On the district railway section alone as many as forty-four trains an hour are run on a single set of rails. When it is borne in mind that every train slows down to enter the station, stops a brief period, and takes a few seconds to get up speed again, repeating the same process less than half a mile further on, it will be realized not only that the service must be run with clockwork regularity, but that such a volume of traffic could be handled at all if the elimination of the seconds had not been elevated into an art.

The London underground service is, in fact, almost the only one, if not the only one, in the world whose time table is based not on minutes but on seconds.

INTRODUCTION

The Glenaladale Silver Black Fox Company, Limited, was incorporated in 1913 with six pairs of foxes, at $90,000. This Company re-capitalized in 1914, with 20 pairs of beautiful Silver Black Foxes, at $15,000 per pair, making a total capitalization of $300,000.

THE FOXES

Six pairs (one year old) proven breeders, and fourteen pairs (1914 pups), making a total of 20 pairs—all young foxes—good for at least 10 years. This Company has bought some of this year's options on foxes with a guarantee that they are pedigreed and of the highest strain and very best quality P. E. Island Inc. foxes.

THE RANCH

The ranch is situated on the well known Glenaladale Farm, owned by Major C. McKinnon, formerly the [illegible] of Sir William [illegible], and is only 12 miles from Charlottetown, in a quiet locality sufficiently removed from any disturbance.

THE RANCHER

Mr. Arthur W. McKinnon, our Ranch Manager, has had much experience in breeding foxes, and has the practical knowledge necessary to efficiently manage and care for the animals.

The foxes will be ranched free of charge to the Company for the first year. This means a large saving to the shareholders, as [illegible] have to pay as high as [illegible] per cent. of the income for ranching purposes. [illegible]

[illegible]

NOTICE

[illegible]

The promoters of this Company are all above board and will not permit any crook to come in and do anything that is not right. Anyone holding stock in this Company who is dissatisfied can, by notifying the Secretary-Treasurer, have his or her money promptly refunded.

FORTUNES IN FOXES

There is money in fox ranching more than anything else ever known. It is good for the rich man and good for the poor man. A poor man cannot buy a pair of Silver Black Foxes but he can easily raise $25.00, $50.00 or $100.00. By investing in this Company he gets back his money in at least two years and then he will have an income for life and for his children to come—and after there will be money in fur farming. One of the reasons for this is that P. E. Island has now 95 per cent. of the world's foxes in captivity. For every one pelt that can be raised there are more than 25 wealthy people waiting for it in London, Russia, France and America.

PELT VALUES

The Fox Pelts have advanced greatly in price since 1910 and you can see for yourself what money was in them then.

Below are the particulars of sale of a consignment of Silver Fox Furs, shipped from Prince Edward Island [illegible] to London, England, and sold there in March, 1910:

Simply fill out the application form and mail to Major C. McKinnon, Secretary-Treasurer, Glenaladale, P. E. I.

All cheques must be made payable to "The Glenaladale Silver Black Fox Co., Ltd."

A POINTER

Just to give you a little idea of what the free ranching of foxes means to the investor, we will figure it out for you.

We have twenty pairs of foxes in the ranch and suppose each pair produces a litter of only four foxes this is equal to 40 pairs and at $15,000 per year it would figure out at $600,000. Now, if we had to pay even 15 per cent. of the income for ranching purposes (which is considerably lower than some companies pay) it would mean that we would have to pay $90,000 for ranching expenses.

We ranch the foxes free for the first year, so that in addition to a guaranteed dividend of 50 per cent., we save you this large outlay of money. While we guarantee 50 per cent., and should each pair in our ranch produce four pups it would mean that your dividend would be about 200 per cent. instead of 50 per cent.

PETERBOROUGH'S PATRIOTIC FUND

$50,000

AND WE'RE GOING TO GET IT !

THIS IS A NATIONAL MOVEMENT. WE ARE IN IT !

The Following Specific Statement of the Aims and Objects of the Movement is placed before the People to afford full Information. Read It Carefully.

DO YOUR PRETTIEST !---DAD'S FIGHTIN' !

To the Citizens of Peterborough:

Peterborough has decided to raise $50,000 for the Patriotic Fund. You should, therefore, know all the facts in order that your enthusiastic support may be assured.

This is a National Movement.

Its object is to see that no one in Canada, in the families of our Soldiers who have gone to the Front, shall suffer want, and 25% of the Fund to be raised here will be set apart to provide assistance to those in reduced circumstances indirectly through the war.

Do not confuse this Fund with the ordinary local Charity Relief Fund. That Fund will be dispensed this year as usual by the City, and from the regular sources.

The Canadian Patriotic Fund deals only with cases where assistance has become necessary to the families of those who have gone to the Front.

How the Fund Will Be Administered

The Wardens of the National Patriotic Fund have decided that the Fund shall be administered on the following basis:

Every case will be investigated separately.

Where families do not need assistance none will be extended.

Where assistance is required its extension will be governed by considerations given herewith.

The basis of relief adopted for families is as follows:

A wife, $1.00 per day, or $30.00 per month.

A child under 5 yrs., 10c per day, or $3.00 per month.

A child between 5 and 10 yrs., 15c per day, or $4.50 per month.

A child between 10 and 15 yrs., 25c per day, or $7.50 per month.

Thus a family of a mother, and three children of the ages of 5, 8 and 13 years respectively, would receive a total of $45.00.

From this is deducted the amount which the Canadian Government pays to the families of soldiers who have gone to the Front (termed separation allowance), $20.00 per month; also any earnings of the family or any other assistance it may be necessary, such as remittance of rent, continuation of wages paid by former employer to soldier, etc. The balance is paid out of the Canadian Patriotic Fund.

When soldiers are reported to have been killed or to be missing after a battle, their Government pay ceases forthwith.

In such cases the Patriotic Relief Fund will provide all the funds necessary to look after their families' welfare until such time as the Government is ready to commence payment to them of the regular pension which it is expected will be provided in due course.

Why a National Fund ?

Some small municipalities and rural districts in Canada have sent a large number of soldiers to the Front.

All these soldiers, no matter where they are from,, are fighting for our defence just as truly as are the soldiers who have gone directly from Peterborough.

Some of the small municipalities may not be able to provide adequately for the needs of all the families of the soldiers whom they have sent forward.

Other municipalities may be able to over-provide for their local needs.

Therefore, it has been decided to establish a National Patriotic Fund for the purpose of providing adequately on the same basis of relief for the assistance of every family of every soldier from Canada that has gone to the Front.

Special Cases Needing Assistance

The War has thrown many men and women out of work. Some of these people are suffering want. Many never needed aid before.

It has been decided to allocate 25% of the money raised as special Local Fund for their relief.

A Dominion Organization

The President is His Royal Highness the Duke of Connaught.

The Honorary Auditor is the Auditor-General for Canada.

This Committee supervises the Expenditures of the National Fund.

What Peterboro' Proposes To Do

Peterborough proposes to raise, all told (including the money already subscribed) $50,000. Of this sum, $37,500 will be deposited in a Peterborough Bank to the credit of the Canadian Patriotic Fund.

$12,500 will be retained in a separate account to be used locally for the relief of families whose breadwinners are out of work on account of conditions created by the war.

The payments will be optional with the giver, whether to make payment in a lump sum, or to spread the payment over periods during several months. It is the hope that people who are willing but not able to make a substantial payment in one sum, may thus have time to spread the payments over several instalments in the future. Let this fact be borne in mind.

How the Money Will Be Paid Out

Each month the Peterborough Relief Committee will prepare an estimate of the funds that will be required during the coming month for the assistance of families of soldiers from Peterborough who have gone to the Front.

This statement will be sent to the Canadian Patriotic Fund at Ottawa to secure a cheque for amount required, which will come as an order on the Peterborough Bank to the credit of The Peterborough Patriotic Committee for the required sum of money. This money will be handled directly by the Peterborough Committee.

Should Peterborough raise more money that is required locally, the surplus will be used by the National Committee. Should Peterborough not raise enough for its own needs, the National Fund will be drawn upon for whatever sum may be necessary.

We desire to raise much more than will be required locally.

The Special Local Relief Fund

The $12,500 will be handled entirely by a local committee for the assistance of families, other than those of soldiers, needing temporary assistance on account of war conditions.

What Other Cities Have Done

The $50,000 we propose to raise is a comparatively small sum for a city like Peterborough. In round figures

Kingston raised	$52,000	Hamilton raised	$200,000
Berlin "	95,000	Ottawa "	300,000
London "	100,000	Toronto "	1,000,000

Montreal raised $2,000,000

Let us, therefore, raise as much more than $50,000 as we can. Because of the great issues that are at stake, let each of us give until it hurts. There will be no real blessing to us if we do anything less than that.

How the Funds Will Be Raised

On Wednesday, Thursday, and Friday, December 9, 10, and 11, the Citizens of Peterborough will be given the privilege of contributing to the Fund.

The canvass will be conducted by 10 or more teams of Citizens, each composed of 10 members—100 in all.

Each day the Citizens of Peterborough will be kept posted as to how the canvass is succeeding.

Should the canvassers fail to call on you, hand your contribution to some Officer of the Committee, to some of the Team Captains, or leave it in the Headquarters, No. 431 George Street.

BRITISH NEWS BRIEFLY TOLD

At Glasgow Police Court a man named James Rafferty was charged with having committed an assault on his son, aged four. In Richmond Park the man took off the boy's clothing and dipped him in the pond. The incident attracted a crowd. Accused was sentenced to thirty days' imprisonment.

Sleepwalker's Fall

Henry Kenyon, Hebden Bridge, fell out of a bedroom window while walking in his sleep. Awakened by his terrible fall, Kenyon's call for help in the dead of night aroused many neighbors, who found him in a shocking condition.

Young Lady's Fall From Cliff

Victimizing a Clergyman

In the High Court at Edinburgh Wm. Gordon Miller was sent to penal servitude for five years for having at Dundee pretended to a clergyman residing there that he had been injured in a railway accident and that he was to be married and wished the clergyman to perform the ceremony. He proposed to arrange the date and borrowed a shilling from the clergyman. There were previous convictions against the prisoner.

Children Poisoned

Two children, a girl of two years and a boy of eleven, belonging to a family of the name of Forbes, who hail from the Glasgow district, were accidentally poisoned at Port Lamont, near Toward, where they were staying on holiday. The two children went out into the fields on Sunday, and it is believed they drank poisoned water or ate some green growth. The girl has died in great pain.

Baby's Remarkable Escape

A fatal accident occurred on the Highland line two miles south of Pitlochry, the victim being Rose M'Millan, thirty-seven, who had for the last week been employed at Moulinearn. Carrying her three-year-old child, she was shopping in Pitlochry, and for a short cut home had apparently taken to the line. She was run down by the good train from Aviemore to Perth. The body was shockingly mutilated. The child was found lying sleeping peacefully by the side of the line.

Life Lost For Water Lilies

A pretty young girl named Katie Clark, of Brober, aged nineteen, who was staying with her aunt in Boyle, went to look after her uncle's cattle on a farm which is situated near a bathing place on the Boyle river. At four o'clock the same afternoon some bathers discovered her dead body, fully dressed, in about four feet of water. It is supposed that in an attempt to pull some water lilies she lost her balance, and was unable to recover herself.

Oldest Inhabitant's Memories

The death is announced of Berwick's oldest inhabitant, Mrs. Lee, who was close upon ninety-nine years of age. Mrs. Lee remembered the last public execution in Berwick, which was that of a woman who had murdered her husband. The execution took place on a gallows erected in the open street. The gallows was housed in a yard near her residence, and as a girl Mrs. Lee used to play on its steps.

Plucky Brother

While bathing in the River Waveney, Charles Gray, fifteen, was drowned, and his brother Ivan, fourteen, at a Bolton (Suffolk) inquest said Charles seemed to have been attacked by cramp. He himself swam nearly eighty yards with Charles holding his arm and towed him until he gradually became exhausted. Within a few yards of the bank Charles let go and sank. He (Ivan) only just managed to reach the bank. The jury praised the boy's pluck and returned a verdict of "Accidentally drowned."

Poisons by Potted Meat

At a Todmorden inquest it was stated that the whole family had eaten potted meat, and that of the three children of a bricklayer named Cavanagh, who all became ill, Hubert, aged seven, died. ROYAL YACHTSMEN

Apropos of King George's success as a yachtsman, it is interesting to note that yachting in bygone times owed much to English sovereigns, from Queen Elizabeth, who had a fine pleasure schooner built at Cowes, to William IV., who founded the Royal Yacht Squadron; but the keenest of all Royal yachtsmen was Charles II. In all, the Merry Monarch owned fourteen yachts, ranging from twenty-five to 166 tons, and one of them, the "Jamie," was designed by the King himself and built at Lambeth under his supervision. Charles and his brother James generally steered their yachts themselves, and Evelyn, in his diary for October 1st, 1661, describes a sailing match between the Royal brothers—the first contest of the kind in British waters of which we have any record.

FRANK CHANCE

Men who know Frank Chance, the American league's $25,000 manager, can perhaps imagine what Chance is shouting at some Highlander, in this picture. Chance does not believe in handling his players with velvet gloves. He rules them with an iron hand and doesn't hesitate to use language that rasps. It is not difficult to imagine Chance raising the skin of some player in this instance.

DUELLING DAYS

Young Bloods Practised With Long-Barrelled Pistols

By the end of the seventeenth century the pistol had come fairly into vogue as a duellist's weapon in England, and from that time forward pistol duels were frequent—more frequent than those with the sword. Gunmakers devoted their best workmanship to duelling pistols, and at duelling range, say up to twenty paces, these weapons were as near perfection as skill could make them. The latter-day pistol had a ten-inch barrel, and carried a ball of 48 to the pound. Only constant practice would make a good shot, and a very high standard of marksmanship was set for the man who aspired to be considered an expert with the pistol. When he could hit twelve wafers at fourteen yards, and do it within six minutes, loading his pistol himself between shots, he might consider himself proficient; and it will be borne in mind that the muzzle-loading pistol took several seconds to properly charge.

Proficiency, of course, was not everything. It was quite as daunting to face a pistol at twelve yards as to face the sword at close quarters, and no proficiency at wafers would atone for nervousness on the ground. One ardent practitioner schooled himself with a contrivance of his own invention. He had the life-size figure of a man with a bracketed hand in which a pistol could be held at the "present," and by means of a cord from the trigger of the pistol in the dummy's grasp to his own belt, he discharged the weapon himself as he fired his own pistol, by slightly drawing back.

Great stress was laid on the importance of aiming at a small object. "Mark well one of the gilt buttons of his coat; a person can never fire with accuracy unless he aim at some small object." Which explains why the experienced duellist "went out" dressed entirely in black, that his person might offer no such mark as the gilt button of an older day.

Being in position, the men each held his arm well in to the side and raised his pistol to the proper level, keeping the head straight, the eyes turned as much to the right as possible, and the pistol directed steadily towards the small object—that gilt button, if the adversary were so obliging to wear such. "Move only the forefinger, and that with just sufficient force to discharge the pistol," was a rule supposed to be carefully observed.

THE RIGHT WAY TO STRIKE A MATCH.

Once in a while we have complaints about our matches breaking in two. This is no fault of the Match, as EDDY'S MATCHES are made from specially selected straight-grained wood only. For the benefit of those who are still in ignorance of the proper way to hold a match (and there are many) we give the following rule:—

"The forefinger of the right hand should be placed" "over the tip of the match and withdrawn quickly" "when the flame comes. This prevents any undue" "leverage on the match, and instinct prevents one" "getting ones finger burned."

Clean pots and pans with
GOLD DUST

Germs of decay accumulate on oft-used pots and pans, and ordinary soap and water only clean off the surface.

Gold Dust does the work—and does it right. It digs deep after germs, cleans like a new whistle and leaves your pots and pans as new, as bright as the day they were new—and sanitarily safe.

Gold Dust does this work in just half the time required by soap or any other cleanser. Does it better, too.

WHOLESALE TRAFFIC IN NOBLE TITLES

Little Tricks Resorted to by Swindlers on Bogus Order Mart—Titles Supplied From $200 to $6,000

The audacity of the plausible swindler who haunts the best Continental hotels and professes to have titles for sale, accompanied with full documentary evidence as to their genuineness, is not the least remarkable characteristic of those who carry on this bogus business.

Take the case, for instance, of the three Germans who were arrested in Paris, charged with carrying on an open traffic in bogus orders and decorations. Taking rooms at one of the best hotels, they ingratiated themselves with various other residents to whom they displayed bags full of decorations, such as the beautiful insignia of the Order of the Golden Fleece, the Garter, the Legion of Honor, and the Order of Isabella the Catholic. They even had a catalogue of prices which ranged from $40 to $6,000, the latter being the price of a Legion of Honor.

The three swindlers claimed to be chamberlains of European Royal households, and thus able to influence the granting of decorations through their connections with Embassies and influential persons, and they were doing quite a thriving trade until they were denounced to the police by a suspicious customer, who discovered that the titles and decorations they had for sale were quite bogus.

A Berlin Scandal

The case recalls the Berlin scandal of some years ago, when an impoverished member of the aristocracy hit upon the idea of replenishing his pocket by posing as an influential member of the Diplomatic Service, who was in a position to obtain any decoration or order required.

The gullible quickly swallowed the bait, and it was only when the bogus title and order monger, who, it was proved, had had scores of decorations specially made for him had mulcted his victims of some thousands of dollars that he was proved to be a fraud.

These swindles are really made possible by the fact that foreign countries, although they do not openly advertise their readiness to do business with those who aspire to affix a handle to their names, carry on, in a quiet manner, a considerable trade in titles. Some time ago, for instance, a great sensation was caused in the Hungarian Diet by the [illegible] of the [illegible] party, who [illegible] the fact that the Government had raised no less than $1,000,000 for the political campaign fund by selling titles and orders, several wealthy Jews having both made [illegible] with decorations bestowed upon them in return for cash payments of $100,000 each.

Widespread Traffic

This method of raising money, of course, is not unknown to political parties in this country, but we have not yet gone so far as Italy, who will make you a prince or a duke for $4,000 and a marquess for $2,500, while the title of count will cost you $2,250 and that of baron $1,250.

The King of Greece does a rather prosperous trade in the Order of the Redeemer, which can be had for $200, while Servia bestows the Order of Takova for a like sum.

The widespread traffic done in titles may be gathered from the fact that a German firm trading in Sweden sends out a circular marked "Private and confidential," offering to secure any orders and decorations required. The list includes Papal honors—the Pope does a little business in titles, and will make you a count for $2,250 or a baron for $1,250—as well as honors of Persia, Turkey, Spain, Portugal, Roumania, and Austria, the cost of which varies considerably.

RECORD GOLF DRIVE

Over Half a Mile With Frozen River as Green

Robert Jolly, better known as "Wee Robbie," one of the younger members of the famous St. Andrews Jollys, all of whom are now golf professionals in the United States, established what he claims is the record drive of a golf ball. The feat was a drive of 1,936 yards, and the drive was made under conditions which were as unusual as the drive itself.

"WEE ROBBIE" JOLLY

Early last winter, after the weather had driven almost all the golfers off the links of the Park Ridge Country Club, a lawyer continued to play over the frozen ground. He experimented. Discovering that the cold golf balls could not be driven as far as he ordinarily drove in summer, he warmed them by a stove before starting out, and carried them inside his clothing, finding that the warm balls striking on the frozen ground would bound and roll fully fifty yards per drive farther than cold ones.

Then, without revealing his secret, he bantered Robbie Jolly into wagering that he could not drive 250 yards. On the frozen ground and with a heated ball the feat proved easy, and the joke was on the professional.

With his Scotch aroused, Jolly remarked that, under proper conditions, he could drive 1,000 yards. It [illegible] and the wager was made. [illegible] the Des Plaines river froze and presented a perfect sheet of ice clean and hard. Jolly notified the lawyer that he was ready for revenge and took them to the river. He teed off a ball warmed to 100 degrees, and, swinging mightily, had the "fair green" was a sheet of ice without obstacles for two miles. The first drive struck the bank about 600 yards away. The second went past the only hazard, the [illegible] at the curve, and, [illegible] forty yards to the bound, whizzed down the middle of the river. The judge stationed at the 1,000-yard mark said it was still going strong when it passed him, but bounded, struck an overhanging willow limb and, after rolling a few yards further, rolled down a slope in the ice against the bank, where it was found.

MOTOR-CYCLISTS' FEAT

Mr. J. H. Lowcock, of [illegible], and Mr. Aubrey Selby, of Bromley, Kent, succeeded in an attempt to ascend Ben Nevis on a motor-cycle. The character of the task may be judged from the fact that the two men found it necessary to take turns in riding up the steep and rugged slopes of the mountain. Their machines were equipped with specially strong tires for the purpose of the climb. Mr. Lowcock and Mr. Selby went to Scotland for the special purpose of the feat which they succeeded in accomplishing.

Ben Nevis is over 4,400 feet high, and has a circumference of over twenty-four miles at the base. Fort William is the favored starting point for tourists intending to ascend the mountain. Precipices of great depth are on its northern side, and in some of the fissures the snow remains unmelted even in the warmest summer.—London Tit-Bits.

Speedy Redskin Pitcher

In the Standing Rock Reservation of Montana there is a young Crow Indian of whom great things are predicted as a baseball pitcher. The redskin is only seventeen years old, and he yet has never seen a big league team play. He answers to the name of "Crow Skin." His discoverer is the reservation physician, a big man and an ex-college player, who declares that the young brave has the fastest ball that he has ever seen, and that means Johnson, Smoky Joe Wood, and all the rest. Crow Skin will not be allowed by Uncle Sam to leave the reservation until he is twenty-one.

ROUGH TACTICS WIN PENNANTS

Baseball General of Bygone Day Believes in Real Warfare on the Diamond

Patsy Tebeau, one of the gamest of old-time managers, has no use for "kid glove" baseball. When he heard that President Ban Johnson regarded Manager Birmingham's Cleveland players as "too rough" Patsy expressed the opinion that the mollycoddle days had come.

"Show me a ball club that is fighting every inch of the way and I'll show you a team that is after the pennant," he said. "This having players shaking hands every time they meet is foolish. It gives the fans the wrong impression. You've got to get the fighting spirit to win.

"We never thought of greeting our opponents. Our idea was to get out and beat them. I can see a runner sliding in first with me playing the bag and getting his head pumped with the ball. Think I'd apologize? Not Patsy Tebeau! 'Get your head out of the way and you won't get hurt,' would be more like it. About a year ago I saw a fellow steal second. He came up all dust, and what do you think happened? Why, the second baseman helped him dust his uniform. And that team finished [illegible] in the race. That isn't my brand of baseball.

"Rush the other fellows off their feet. Make them think you're tough. [illegible]

PATSY TEBEAU
Fighting Manager of the old Cleveland Spiders.

"There's a difference between rowdyism and aggressiveness. The aggressive player will be on top when the parlor boy is at the bottom. Off the field, oh, well, that's different. On the field fight them to the last."

BEN TINCUP IS RICH

Indian Pitcher Plays Ball Only Because He Likes It

The majority of ball players are in the game for the amount of money they can get out of it; a few play it because of their love for the pastime. Ben Tincup belongs to the latter class. Tincup is a Cherokee Indian pitcher the Phillies picked up. He hails from Texas, and is said to be the richest ball player in the world, and probably one of the wealthiest men in baseball.

When the Indian comes of age in a few months his yearly income will be over $50,000 a year. He already has $50,000 stored away in a bank, besides being the possessor of 400 acres of valuable oil lands in Oklahoma, which the Government is leasing for him. So if Tincup fails to make good in the big leagues he won't have any cause to worry.

Since he is one of the few remaining Cherokee Indians, all the Oklahoma lands are held in trust for him. As soon as he is 21 years old he will go to Washington to collect the dividends which are accumulating for him. As Tincup's allotment of land was among the oil fields he is wealthier than many of the other survivors of the Cherokee tribe.

Preparing in Time

Antwerp has already commenced to prepare for the Olympic games, to be held in that city in 1920. A committee has been formed, and the support of the most influential persons in Belgium obtained.

The town authorities are to obtain a vote of several million francs for the expenses, and everything is being done to make the event a huge success. In recent years Belgium has come to the fore in international sports.

Forgot Bride For Dog

So anxious was Charles [illegible], of Carlisle, Pa., a noted wing shot, to recover a black and white pointer that he had lost that he forgot that it was his wedding day. When he was told an hour before the wedding by his [illegible] that the dog had disappeared he rushed out of the house and started hunting through the woods [illegible]

KING GEORGE'S

AMATEUR PICTURES ENLARGED AT HOME

It is an easy matter to enlarge snapshots to a suitable size for framing, and it is not necessary to have a lot of fancy and costly apparatus to do it with. Almost any hand camera can be turned into an enlarging camera and fine results can be obtained.

The principal requisite is a room in which all light can be excluded and which has a window that will let in unobstructed light where you want it. A disused attic chamber or a storeroom will be fine. Even the cellar can be used if the cellar has a window that admits a lot of light. Cover the glass in the window sash with black paper and make it absolutely light tight, except for one place that is just the size of the camera box. If the window sash has four panes of glass it would be well to take out one pane for this purpose. Fit your camera tightly into the opening. If possible let this really be a hole in the window. You can then add to the light by equipping your camera back with are reflecting mirror.

Fit the back of your camera to the opening in the window and see that there are no leaks of light around it. The entire amount of light let into the room should come directly through the camera. Put the plate or film which you are to print in a plate holder or printing frame and attach it to the back of the camera so that the light will come through it and pass into the camera. Fix your plate or film with the image upside down.

Then place a table near to the window and put an easel or drawing board upon it so that the beam of light passing through the camera will fall on the board. Close the shutter of the camera. Pin a piece of bromide paper to the drawing board while the light is excluded from the room, and when all is fixed open the camera. The light passing through the plate and then the lens will print the image accurately on the bromide paper. The size of the enlargement depends on the distance the drawing board is from the lens. When you have your picture printed as you desire fix it in the way prescribed for bromide papers and your enlargement is finished.

Simple, isn't it? And yet it gives the finest sort of results.

BLUNDERS IN NOVELS

Women Writers Have Made Some Amusing Mistakes Writing of Sport

That popular novelists make all sorts of funny mistakes and perpetrate marvellous anachronisms when writing their tales is well known. Dickens, Scott, Thackeray, Reade, and so on, even Mrs. Florence Barclay, have all fallen into the trap. But in nothing are so many laughable blunders made by novelists as in relation to sport, and this is particularly the case with women writers.

"Ouida" was probably the most astounding of all great story writers of her sex in this respect. Speaking of one of her heroes who was taking part in a famous boat-race, "Ouida" makes this astonishing statement:

"All in the boat rowed steadily, but none rowed so fast as number six."

If "Ouida" has any blunder to surpass this amusing error in a sporting context, it may be found in her description of a great horse-race, wherein her heroine is supposed to be the owner of the winner. And, this horse having won, the female novelist goes on to show the [illegible] made by the lady owner when "she came proudly into the paddock, leading the winner of the Waterloo Cup." The Waterloo Cup is the trophy awarded for the finest dog-race in the world.

Even Marie Corelli is not always accurate. Says she, in "The Treasure of Heaven," when her hero is speaking in that book:

"After school-hours I got an evening job, with a shilling a week, for bringing home eight Highland bull-heifers from pasture." Bull-heifers, indeed! What sort of creatures are they?

One of our living women novelists made her readers wonder, especially those of them who were swimmers or sailors. Indeed, the feat her hero achieved—according to her story—ought to be immortalized in letters of gold. The hero was supposed to have jumped headlong into a raging river to rescue the heroine and the following way is how he did it:

"With one hand he held her lovely head above the seething waters, and with the other he called loudly for help." Another feminine novelist makes her hero win the English Derby and astonish his friends by his prowess at partridge shooting two days later, regardless of the fact that the Derby is run early in June and partridge shooting does not begin 'til September.

Y. M. C. A. NOTES

Every evening sees three or four events under way in the Y.M.C.A. at the same time. A man who visited the building the other evening and found some two hundred young men amusing themselves in different ways throughout the building asked us if this was not something extra and was surprised when we informed him that he could find from one hundred and fifty to two hundred young men in the building almost every evening at the present season. It seems as though the young men were crowding the building as never before, the day time attendance being also increased by the fact that so many men are out of work.

A letter received from Physical Director Carson states that his mother died Monday morning at 4 o'clock and that he will be back the first part of next week. The Association membership and the community are in general sympathy with Mr. Carson in his bereavement.

PARLIAMENTARY HOWLERS

Like the Irishman who said that his rope had only one end because the other had been cut away, Mr. John Burns, when he spoke of "throwing out a lifeline" in Parliament, provided a very amusing illustration of the art of making a statement which contradicts itself. Alluding to one of the Labor members during the course of a debate, the President of the Board of Trade said, "I should like to throw the honorable member a lifeline, so that I might pluck him as a brand from the burning."

It recalls the famous "bull" made by Sir William Hart-Dyke, the Unionist ex-Minister, who caused uproarious laughter in the House of Commons one day by remarking, "The right honorable gentleman has caught big fish in his time. He has gone to the top of the tree to find them."

Alluding to an item of $10,000,000 in the Army Estimates one year, a certain member described it as "a flea bite in the ocean," while another, advocating an increase in the European troops employed in India, remarked, "You may depend upon it, sir, the pale face of the British soldier is the backbone of the Indian Army."

BRITAIN'S CENSORSHIP IS MAKING GOOD

London, Dec. 4.—I am informed on the highest naval authority that the story of a recent naval incident as published in the United States and as known in Germany, is not the full story of all that happened. Germany's naval strategy is once again befogged and upset by half truths which, if not in the British interests, disprove the statements made by the German press agents to the English press yesterday, and indicate how completely successful this British policy of befooling the enemy has been both on land and sea.

Thought U.S. Invaded Canada

Again, Germany believed United States troops had actually crossed Canadian territory and were being welcomed with open arms by Canadians at the very moment the Canadian contingent was assembling at Valcartier from every part of the Dominion.

In many other ways German authorities have been left completely at sea by British treatment of news, as explained by Asquith and Churchill.

Protest in London.

London, Dec. 4.—The Morning Post has renewed an attack upon the British press censorship, with particular reference to the secrecy enjoined on the British press regarding "a certain naval mishap, now nearly a month old" particulars of which have appeared in Canadian and American papers.

"We should like to speak plainly on this subject," says the Post, "yet the Tower may await us if we do. The British press is, in fact, forbidden to mention a mishap to the British navy of which the press of the whole world is speaking. The German press have for some time been in full possession of the facts, which they gathered from America, and are gloating over them, not so much because they relate to a material loss, but because their suppression in England seems to them to offer evidence that the British nation is in a state of panic and is not to be trusted with the truth.

"Thus, for example, the Kolnisch Zeitung says: 'The English Government dared not communicate this serious loss to the nation, because it feared universal excitement. A very low estimate is thus placed by its own Government on the nerves and character of the English people, which gives one cause to think.' We are bound to say that for once we agree with a German newspaper. It does give one 'cause to think.'

"There is involved a mishap of considerable material dimensions, no doubt, but nothing to cause anything more than a national sigh of regret, and it is treated by the Government as if it were some appalling catastrophe, so dark that merely to read about it would throw the nation into a state of frenzy. It is ridiculous, but it is also humiliating.

"We say plainly that it is an insult, not only to the British press, but to the British nation."

CITY COUNCIL APPROPRIATES $10,000 FOR PETERBORO PATRIOTIC FUND

Will be Raised by an Assessment of One Mill on the Dollar Next Year--Big Patriotic and Loyal British Deputation Wait Upon the City Fathers in This Connection. $300 for Home Guard

The City Council Chamber last night was the scene of British patriotism and war enthusiasm unexcelled in the history of Peterborough. The occasion was the presence of a huge delegation from the Patriotic Fund Association in support of municipal action in support of British freedom and universal liberty. The chamber was packed with a loyally enthusiastic aggregation of representative citizens, the most of whom were business men with large interests at stake, and whose attendance reached high-water mark. These gentlemen, through their speakers, not only endorsed the Patriotic Fund canvass about to be made, but respectfully asked that the corporation give stimulus to the movement by voting one mill on the dollar of next year's assessment to that fund. This means that every ratepayer be assessed one mill on the value of his property for the support of the families of Canadian soldiers fighting the empire's battles, and in aid of those in distress through the exigencies of the war. The representations of the deputation were [illegible] the City Council by a [illegible] vote, heads the subscription list with $10,000, which amounts to a trifle under a one mill assessment on real property. It is quite understood that in cases where property owners are in straightened circumstances by reason of existing conditions the additional assessment will not be pressed, but left in abeyance until circumstances are more favorable to the payment thereof.

His Worship Mayor Buller was a whole regiment in himself in support of the deputation, with a loyal lieutenant in Finance Minister Ald. Johnston.

Ald. Johnston moved, seconded by Ald. F.H. Dobbin, that the Council head the subscription list for Peterborough's Patriotic Fund with $10,000, to be raised on next year's assessment.

This was carried on the following division:

Ayes—Aldermen Duncan, Stratton, Dobbin, Duffus, Johnston, Weir and the Mayor—Seven votes.

Nays—Aldermen Saunders, Green, Langford and McIntyre—Four votes.

Aldermen Green's and Saunders' amendment that the matter be left over till the first meeting of next year's council was lost on the following division:

Ayes—Aldermen Saunders, Green, Langford and McIntyre.

Nays—Aldermen Stratton, Dobbin, Duncan, Duffus, Johnston, Weir and his worship.

Aldermen McIntyre and Duffus, to make things interesting we suppose, moved in amendment to the amendment that the Council's grant be half a mill on the dollar, but they were the only ones who supported the resolution.

The Discussion.

Judge Huycke first addressed the council in support of a substantial stimulus to the Committee's effort to raise $50,000 for Patriotic purposes. In the course of a brilliantly stirring address he pointed out that both Premier Hearst and Mr. Rowell, the leader of the Provincial opposition, had pledged themselves to legislate in support of any action that municipalities may take in aid of the Patriotic Fund movement. A German inspired literary production, he said, freely affirmed that the aim of Germany is to make a vassal of Britain, but he was confident that the day would never come when either the Mother Country or Britain would be a vassal of the Teutonic race. Many of us, he urged, cannot fight in the trenches with our brave brothers at and in preparation for the front, but we all can help in a financial way. His honor then referred in glowing terms to what other municipalities are doing in support of the war, and suggested that Peterborough's corporation contribute one mill on the dollar. That is to say that every ratepayer assessed for $1,000 have the privilege of giving $1 to the Patriotic Fund, and so on upwards. If Canada is not overrun by Germans today, he concluded, it is owing to the British fleet, and surely those of us who cannot fight in the Empire's cause are ready to pay in support of it a reasonable [illegible] placed upon the tax bill. This question should be dealt with in a large hearted and patriotic way, and it lies with the council to set the key-note of what Peterborough's contribution shall be in preservation of our own dignity and self-respect.

Mr. Aylmer addressed Council in support of Judge Huycke's presentation of the needs of the hour.

Mr. F. D. Kerr contended that the city which has sent for empire service such men as Col. Clegg, Commandant of the Salisbury camp, Major Hill, Major Sawers, C. Ackerman and brother, to say nothing of privates, should not be found wanting in its contribution to the Patriotic Fund. He would like to see the good old city of Peterborough, the leader of the Midland District set an example worth while.

Mr. D. O'Connell gave a stirring patriotic address, and affirmed that the Patriotic Fund Committee could not hope for a spontaneous response to their demands unless the corporation itself responds to the request of the deputation.

The Mayor spoke loyally to the question and supported the deputation's request. We have never known, he said, a war tax as is customary in other countries in time of peace as well as of war, and Peterborough should rise cheerfully to the present occasion.

Finance Minister Alderman Johnston was in earnest favor of the deputation's request. He pointed out that the city's assessment is $11,[illegible],000, and the additional assessment over that of last year would amount to [illegible]. He felt that the Council must take action worthy of the City of Peterborough.

Ald. Green, while in accord with the spirit of the occasion, did not feel justified in committing next year's Council to a heavy financial obligation entered into in the dying hours of the Council of 1914.

Ald. [illegible] contended that Peterborough corporation should put up a handsome sum for this great cause.

Ald. Dobbin's sentiments on this question are well known. He [illegible] a rate of one mill on the dollar [illegible] pass without question.

Ald. Stratton spoke in a similar strain.

Ald. Duncan was willing, personally, to pay his share, but questioned whether it would be right to assess ratepayers in distress one mill on the dollar.

Ald. Saunders concurred in Ald. [illegible] remarks.

Ald. McIntyre was in sympathy with the fund, but just what amount should be voted he was not prepared to say. He would approve of half a mill on the dollar, to be supplemented later on in next year's Council.

Ald. Weir supported the proposition for a mill on the dollar.

Ald. Langford could not support the proposition. The citizens of Peterborough should be canvassed first, and any shortage of the amount required could then be made good by next year's Council.

His worship here contended that the people are not worrying about the dying hours of the council. The working men are fighting our battles; the working men pay the bulk of municipal demands; "and," he urged, "I am willing to appeal to the working men tomorrow on this issue. (cheers.)

Mr. Kerr here explained that not one cent is being paid to any person for assisting in the canvass for $50,000.

Judge Huycke opportunely suggested that should the one mill assessment prove a hardship to any one, the debt could be carried over till peace arrives, when it would be gladly paid.

Incidentally Ald. Green remarked that he would cheerfully vote for the one mill assessment if the next year's council, but he took exception to this council committing their successors to any such obligation.

$300 For Home Guard.

French Heavy Artillery Proves More Than a Match for Germans

Paris, Dec. 7.—A determined offensive is at present being pressed by the allies from the coast to the Argonne district. The official communique from the war office to-day declares that the French attack is greatly superior to the German, and advantages are being gained over the enemy. The allies continue attacking the few remaining trenches held by the enemy on the left bank in the Yser region, the statement declares. The French artillery yesterday obtained advantage in the Champagne district.

Ottawa, Dec. 7.—For the past several days at least one death a day has been reported from the Canadian contingent. By cable to the Minister of Militia today the death is announced of Sapper George Burnett, of the divisional engineers, of pneumonia. The next of kin are his wife and children who live in Manchester, England. Burnett enlisted in Toronto.

London, Dec. 7.—The Daily Mail's correspondent in northern France describes a battle between a Zeppelin dirigible balloon and three British aeroplanes which occurred a few days ago. The Zeppelin manoeuvred skilfully and was unable to make use of her explosives. Bullets from the aeroplanes soon found the balloon's envelope, which crumpled up.

London, Ont., Dec. 7.— For strategic reasons, the training camp for the third Canadian contingent from this district will likely be moved to Windsor, from London, because of the rumours regarding German movements at the border. The militia authorities plan to have at least part of the force kept at Windsor. Col. Kelly of the 27th Regiment, Sarnia, is expected to be the commander.

Copenhagen, Dec. 7.—The German submarine U 16 has arrived at Esbjorg badly damaged. The cause of the vessel's injury is unknown.

Esbjorg is in Denmark on the North Sea. Last week it was stated that German submarines ran foul of British scoutships in the North Sea and one was sunk and another hit and disabled. It was thought that the U 16 was the disabled craft. She will probably be interned.

ONE RUSSIAN FORTRESS FULL OF PRISONERS

London, Eng., Dec. 6—Ten thousand Austrian and German prisoners arrived at the Russian fortress of Kiff on Wednesday of this week. Reports from Petrograd received here to-day state that 130,000 Austro-German soldiers and 2,000 officers made prisoners by the Russians have passed through Kiff since the war began. The fortress is declared to be crowded to its utmost capacity, with the Austrians and Germans taken during the operations in Galicia and in southern Poland. The Russian official statement of to-day while claiming no complete victory, indicates that the Germans have been swung back twenty miles at one important point in their main line of advance toward Warsaw. Desperate fighting is now in progress along the main road between Lowicz and Lodz. Glovno, mentioned in the official despatch is lying in the line of the fighting front, is about half way between these two points. The official statement therefore indicates that the Germans have not been driven from Lowicz, the outermost point reached in their advance, but with this town as a pivot, have been swung back twenty miles from Skierniewice upon Glovno, directly west.

FOE WEAKENING WESTERN ARMY TO PROTECT PRUSSIA FROM RUSSIANS

The Russian Peril is Pressing Hard Upon Germany--Eastern and Western Operations, Although Divided by the Width of Europe, are Closely Related--Germans Apparently Cannot Sustain Their Strength on Both Borders

New York, Dec. 7.—J.W.T. Mason, the United Press military critic, says to-day: "Simultaneously with Field Marshall Hindenberg's victory at Lodz, Berlin makes the first official announcement of the war since the battle of the Marne, that the Germans have been compelled to abandon a French position. The German evacuation of Vermelle, between Lille and Arras, may turn out to possess much greater significance than the defeat of the Russians in Poland. The two operations, although removed from each other by the width of Europe, are closely related. There seems no doubt but that the Germans' victory has been won with troops drawn from France and Belgium; it appears evident too that the allies are now more nearly on an equality with the German strength in the west than at any time since the war began. Nevertheless to predict from this change in the situation that the Germans will soon be out of Belgium and France would be hazardous. The future conditions in the west depends on conditions in Russia. It is certain however, that Germany counts far more on the necessity for preventing the Russian invasion of German territory than in holding off the allies in the west. Russia's penetration into the heart of Germany would inevitably mean crippling loss of territory to the Hohenzollerns. Furthermore there is no continuous national barrier in the east, such as the Rhine forms in the west. Compelled to choose between weakening her western army or letting the Slav hordes overrun the Prussian provinces, Germany cannot afford to hesitate a moment and therefore any immediate success that may be counted upon by the western allies will depend on the development of the eastern peril."

THE ALLIES ARE FORCING HOME OFFENSIVE MOVEMENT IN WEST

Paris, Dec. 7.—The French artillery is now outranging the German and proving more effective all along the line. This is indicated in the latest official statements from the War Office and is accepted to-day as an evidence that the new guns which have been expected by the French, have been brought up and are figuring extensively in the offensive movement the allies are pushing from the coast and along the entire battle line. Heavy fighting is reported in Alsace to-day. In the Argonne the German trenches are being vigorously assailed by artillery and through mining operations. All new positions taken by the allied troops along the Yser have been held and the advantage is being followed up with the greatest determination. The French artillery forced the Germans to evacuate Vermelles.

GERMANS STRAIN EVERY EFFORT TO PIERCE RUSSIAN INFANTRY LINE

London, Dec. 7.—The Times correspondent writes from Petrograd:

"The fighting near Lodz has been marked by many stirring episodes. The Novoe Vremya correspondents writes that daring attacks by the Siberian Cavalry at Rzgow, Brezin, Tushin and Lask and on the line to Zgierzstrykow will be commemorated in history. The forest between Brezin and Krupin is a continuous German graveyard.

"One Russian regiment, which already has won renown early in the war, charged a howitzer battery of the enemy. The centre broke before the hellish fire, but nothing could arrest the rush on the flanks.

They cut down the gunners, captured the howitzers and cleared the way for the infantry. How unexpected and terrible was this joint attack appeared from the firing of the village of Krupin, where maddened German soldiers were seeking refuge. They were burned alive when Russian shells set the huts on fire.

"Wednesday morning the Germans left Zgierz to storm Lodz, but did not reach even the Russian trenches. The Czar's infantry received the German columns on their bayonets, while the Russian batteries shelled them. The Germans strained every effort to pierce the Russian infantry line, but in vain."

FRENCH ARTILLERY ARE SUPERIOR

Paris, Dec. 7.—The French War Office gave out an official communication this afternoon, as follows:

In the region of the Yser we continue to attack the few entrenchments still held by the enemy on the left bank of the canal.

In the region of Armentieres and of Arras, as well as in the Oise territory [illegible] region and in the Argonne there is nothing to signal, except to refer in general terms to the superiority of our offensive.

In the Champagne, our heavy artillery, on several occasions, has shown marked superiority over that of the enemy.

There is nothing new on the eastern front of our line [illegible] the positions of preceding days have been maintained.

INFANTRY WEAPONS

Infantry arms consist of the rifle, bayonet and machine gun. The "pom-pom," which figured so much in South Africa, has been withdrawn.

The service machine gun is the .303 maxim, which will fire a continuous leaden stream of bullets at the rate of 600 a minute, or 10 bullets every second, at ranges of from 300 to 1,300 yards.

The maxim weighs 60 pounds, and its lightness enables it to be carried anywhere the troops can go. It can be taken along roads on wheels, across country on pack animals, or, if needs be, shouldered by a single soldier right up into the firing line.

The weak point of the maxim is that its mechanism is liable to jam and render it useless. In the hands of trained gunners, its destructive power is greater than land mines, bursting shrapnel, cavalry charges, bayonet charges, or any variety of rifle fire.

FORCIBLE FEEDING

"Not Used as a Deterrent, But It Does Deter," Says Premier

The Rev. R. J. Campbell, Dr. R. F. Horton, and other ministers addressed a letter to Mr. Asquith protesting against forcible feeding of suffragist prisoners.

Replying through his private secretary, the Prime Minister stated that Mr. M'Kenna repudiated the statement which had appeared in the memorial that he had defended forcible feeding in the House, not only as a means of detaining people in prison but also as a deterrent.

"It is true," the Premier's letter ran, "that forcible feeding in some cases actually deters prisoners from adopting the hunger strike, as they realize that the strike will not secure their release, but it has never been used as a deterrent or for any purpose, except to preserve the life and health of a prisoner, and it has never been defended on any but this ground."

Amazing Story of a "Cure."

Kitty O'Brien, a pretty Irish girl of seventeen, hailing from Crossmaglen, [illegible], is alleged to have been cured at St. Winefride's Well in an amazing manner. The girl states that for the past five years she had suffered from tuberculosis in the knee, and for about two years had had her left knee in plaster of paris and walked with crutches. She was recommended by Father Quigley to visit Holywell. The effect was remarkable, she said. A spasm of pain shot up her leg and side. The next instant the spasm returned and darted downwards to the foot and ceased. She knew then that a cure had been effected. The plaster of paris bandage and the crutches were discarded and left in the crypt, and, it is said, Miss O'Brien walked out of the well free from pain and lameness.

Hermit and His Cat

Though he is fifty-three years of age, David Thomas, a Fishguard hermit, has never been inside a train, and, beyond a short ride on a wagon, has never been further than his native town. He has lived the whole of his lifetime in a little cottage at Lower Fishguard, and his sole companion is a fine tabby cat, of which he is passionately fond. He has been unable to follow ordinary occupations owing to bad eyesight, and for some years he has been almost blind. He was recently given a hand fishing net, and he now goes down to the beach daily to fish for prawns. "I cannot see when I have caught anything," said Davy, "but I can tell by feeling in the net, though I am sometimes bitten by crabs."

Spain exported 4,000,000 pounds of sugar for cigarettes last year.

Literary Doctors

The fact that the celebrated American physician, Dr. Silas Weir Mitchell, who died recently at Philadelphia, had a distinct reputation in the literary world as a poet and novelist, calls to mind several other instances of relationship between pill and quill. Dr. Mitchell's best novel "Hugh Wynne, Free Quaker," created almost as much interest as some of the stories of Sir Arthur Conan Doyle, who got his ideas for "Sherlock Holmes" while walking the Edinburgh infirmary under the eye of that remarkable surgeon, Dr. Joseph Bell.

Another Scottish doctor, Dr. John Brown, was the immortal author of "Rab and His Friends." Ricardo Stephens, the author of "The Cruciform Mark" and "The Wooing of Gray Eyes," practises and writes in Brora, Sutherlandshire, in the heart of a deer forest.

Sir Frederick Treves, who achieved the highest eminence as a surgeon, has since become one of the most widely read authors of the day, while Sir Ronald Ross, who has done remarkable work in tropical diseases, acquired high repute for his writing on general scientific subjects.

Robert Bridges, the Poet Laureate, is a doctor; and among women doctors, Dr. Lillias Hamilton and Dr. Margaret Todd (Graham Travers) are both well known writers of fiction.

BUTTERMILK CHEESE

Dairy By-product Utilized at Agricultural College

In the Dairy Department of the Ontario Agricultural College, Miss Belle Millar, in charge of the Home Dairy Work, made some experiments in the utilization of dairy by-products. Cheese was made from skim milk and buttermilk. The making of cheese from skim milk is comparatively simple, but the buttermilk requires a little more of a process, which is described as follows:

Heat the buttermilk to 80 degrees F., as rapidly as possible, stirring enough to ensure even heating. Leave it undisturbed for an hour.

Heat to 135 degrees rapidly, and with just enough stirring to ensure even heating. Cover it to retain the heat, and leave undisturbed for about an hour.

Without further stirring drain the curd by hanging it up in a cheesecloth bag, or by placing a piece of cheesecloth over a rack or strainer. As the portions of the curd next the cloth will drain more quickly, lift the cloth, and allow the curd to roll over, thus securing more even and more rapid drainage.

As soon as the curd is properly drained it is salted and packed. The amount of salt to use will depend on the consumer. 1 ounce of salt to 5 pounds of cheese is recommended, but many prefer 1 ounce of salt to 3 pounds of cheese.

LAWN EDGER

Effective Tool for Trimming Turf Along Paths, etc.

To give a lawn that neatly kept appearance that is admirable, the edges of the turf along walks and flower beds must be trimmed closely. For this purpose a new edging tool has been patented. On the end of a long handle is a single sheet of metal with a straight, flat section adapted to lie on top of the ground and a V-shaped cutting section bent down from it, with sharp edges on both ends. By pressing this tool along the edge of the turf the overhanging grass is trimmed neatly and a smooth little trench is cut between the grass and the edge of the walk, or whatever the border is. This is a great improvement over the usual clumsily borders that mar the appearance of otherwise attractive suburban places.

MISSED COBALT'S RICHES

Old French Voyageurs Knew of One Mine 150 Years Ago

That the old French voyageurs and missionaries knew of the existence of at least one mine old maps show beyond dispute. If they had extended their researches for minerals beyond the waterways and had stumbled upon the silver mines at Cobalt what a difference it would have made to the probable destiny of the Dominion?

The discovery of Cobalt a century and a half ago was quite within the realms of possibility, says The Cobalt Nugget. There was an old Indian trail within a few feet of Long, now Cobalt Lake, and where the Indian was wont to go, there too, the French voyageur could and did follow him. There would have been no difficulty in mining the ore. It was right on the surface and could easily have been mined and taken down in boats to Quebec. Then would the world have been astounded with the glamor of a silver Eldorado in the heart of Canada. The French king would have taken more pains to conserve the country which his predecessor had valued as so many arpents of snow and the destiny of the Dominion might have fallen along quite other lines.

Problems of the Large Employer

In the small factory, frequently managed by a resident owner, the continuance of a system of direct contact between employer and worker has generally operated to maintain and perpetuate harmonious relations. The problem before the large corporation-owned plant is to provide that ready touch which, by emphasizing the essential community of interests, establishes a sense of unity and fellowship. It can be done only by making this oneness of aim and interest a reality, and not merely the occasion for pleasant speech-making. It cannot be done by reducing wages; it may be done by dividing profits. Success depends principally on an unfailing insight into the needs and problems of the body of employes, and that insight can only be obtained by sharing the problems of management with the men. The degree to which employers are prepared to go in this direction is a sound indication of their earnestness in desiring the removal of the prevailing mood of discontent. —Engineering Magazine.

DAILY MAGAZINE PAGE FOR EVERYBODY

How Should Parents Regard Their Children?

By Winifred Black

Copyright, 1914, by Newspaper Feature Service, Inc.

Winifred Black

THE teachers have started a league. Have you heard about it?

They call it the Parents' League—but it's really the teachers in disguise.

One of the teachers who's helping to start the league in one part of the country has just been telling me about it.

"We can't stand it another minute," said Teacher. "We really can't. We're willing to make the girls brush their hair and the boys brush their teeth. We don't object to finding out whether the girls have anything for breakfast at all or if the boys really go home to luncheon, or just play ball and then come back to hungry to work.

"We don't mind trying to teach not only the lessons in the books—but all the lessons outside the books as well—kindness, courtesy, morality, honesty, ambition. These things are not down in the curriculum, but we're supposed to teach them just the same. We don't mind it in the least; we're used to it.

"It wasn't so hard a few years ago; but now, with the moving pictures and the cheap theatres and the vulgar songs and the queer dances, we really don't know what in the world we're going to do with our children, unless the parents consent to take some sort of slight interest in their own children.

"That's what the league is for—here is what is says in the bylaws and constitution about the object of the league:

" 'The object of the league is to unite parents in an effort to promote the moral, mental and physical well-being of their children by establishing wholesome standards in matters affecting their education, amusements and home life.' "

What the Parents Want.

I began to laugh, but Teacher looked at me reproachfully.

"How can you laugh?" she said. "It's no joke, I can tell you. I teach in a private school and I have in my special classes 25 children, boys and girls, and I doubt if one of these children ever says one word to either father or mother beyond 'good morning' and 'good night' and 'I wish I had' or 'why can't I go?' My children come to school at 8:15—the parents insist upon that. They breakfast alone—mother and father are not up yet; they bring their luncheon, and they stay till 6 o'clock.

"Mother and father insist upon that, too. And it is better than letting them go home—there's nobody there to look after them.

"Mother is at a tango class, or she's playing bridge, or she's motoring, and father is out on the links or down in the gymnasium, or over at the club talking polo ponies.

"My sister teaches in a public high school—

"Her children have just about the same kind of a time, only they're left to themselves more. The public school teachers won't take any responsibility for their pupils personally after 4 o'clock.

"My sister says her parents are busy, too. Father's down town at business and mother is studying Strindberg or joining a culture club, or reading a paper on 'The Moral Effect of Women on the Business World,' or shopping, or having tea at one of the department stores. And Teacher has to take the entire moral as well as the mental training of the children in her school upon herself. And Teacher is getting tired of it. Besides, we're afraid, we Teachers.

"We do everything we can, but we're afraid."

Teacher showed me the constitution and the bylaws of the new League, and she told me that they were forming it all over the country, and that it was sometimes difficult to get the parents to join—because parents seem to be such busy people and to belong to so many leagues already.

Do you believe it, all this that Teacher says? Teacher is a good woman and a clever woman, and a woman who speaks the truth, but really I wonder—

Can it be possible that we're all going, just the least little bit in the world, crazy—we American mothers.

I met a woman the other day, and her eyes were shining and her face was like the face of a happy little child.

"I'm going to see 'The Blue Bird,'" she said. "Have you seen it?—oh, no, that isn't seeing it. Come with me, I'm going with the children."

And I went with the woman, and we took the children, and never, so long as I live, shall I forget that afternoon.

Trading Gold for What?

They weren't mortals who sat there with us in the stuffy theatre—they were Faith and Hope and Charity—and Love and Trust and Fidelity—and they laughed and they cried and they clapped their little hands and were not ashamed—and they believed it all—the beautiful, beautiful story of the search for happiness and the finding of it in the little kitchen in the little home of the humble, simple people.

And when we went out of the theatre I looked at my friend and she was smiling and the tears stood in her eyes—and I understood then why she alone of all the women I know has the face of a happy child.

Once when I was a little girl my mother gave me a ring of gold for my birthday, and I went to school, and a clever child who always was at the head of the arithmetic class persuaded me to trade the ring of gold for a ring of glass beads she had made herself and a handful of parched corn. I did not want to make the trade—I almost cried at the thought of giving up the shining ring of gold—but the clever child was a good talker and she lived in a fine house—and—I let her have my little ring of gold.

And my mother looked at me reproachfully—but she did not make me go and get the ring again.

"You'll learn," she said, "my little girl—you'll learn." And oh, how bitterly I learned.

Are we trading a ring of purest gold for one of cheap and sordid making when we give up the companionship of children for anything that this world can possibly give?

Sometimes it seems so, doesn't it, members of the Parents' League?

Dear Annie Laurie:

I [illegible] to hearing of [illegible] I hope [illegible] because I want to tell you [illegible]. You see I have such a dear boy cousin, but the trouble is every one thinks I am too much in love with him. I try not to show that I really care, but the more I try the [illegible]. Don't you think it is [illegible] to [illegible]? Do you think I should [illegible] or should I show him that I really care?

I hope you won't laugh at me, for I [illegible]. I am just [illegible] years old, and I [illegible] such a [illegible] age. [illegible]

WHY, you dear little [illegible], what a [illegible] you are [illegible]. You [illegible] just [illegible] as you talk, don't you. I can [illegible] before [illegible].

"[illegible]" seems to be right in this [illegible], but really are [illegible] love with your [illegible] cousin—very much indeed, [illegible] is [illegible], if you ask me.

He doesn't seem to be in love with you, does he? He likes you just as a little cousin should like you. And cousins, you know, must not love each other, not if they're first cousins.

Keep away from your cousin for a while and don't let him suspect for a minute that you think you are in love with him. You aren't, you know, at all. [illegible] in love with love, [illegible] and [illegible] and you've made yourself believe that you're in love with him.

[illegible] I [illegible] "romantic age" when I was [illegible]. Dear me, that was a long time ago.

Annie Laurie

THEY have danced all winter and all spring under ballroom lights, in the cleared spaces of dining halls, in home impromptus, and not a few times in solitary practice.

And now comes the lure of outdoors. The spell of new steps is still upon them. The babble of music—any old music—is sufficient incentive for that other music of motion to which youth and age alike are giving themselves over as never before since dancing began to happen. All nature is piping its syncopation. The birds are twittering a tango; the breeze is murmuring a hesitation. Wars or rumors of wars have never stopped such music or such response. It seems that it is always dancing time.

Poor old "bridge" is forgotten. There is only one season to an enthusiasm. It is the season of NOW.

Peter's Adventures in Matrimony

By Leona Dalrymple

Author of the new novel, "Diane of the Green Van," awarded a prize of $10,000 by Ida M. Tarbell and S. S. McClure as judges.

The truth about "the girl in the case" distinguishes this new series by Miss Dalrymple. Her character studies will not appear unfamiliar to the majority of readers, who will follow the fortunes of "Peter" with interest.

What "Forgetting" Meant.

LEONA DALRYMPLE

"OH, Peter!" wailed Mary. "I've forgotten the fire!"

I didn't say anything, and it was considerable continence on my part that I didn't, for Mary is always forgetting fires. They go out with systematic and fiendish regularity. Mary seems to have a blighting glance with fires. Sometimes she has but to look at glowing coals and shortly after they expire. Then, of course, Peter dutifully trots about and builds them over again.

Such are the privileges of matrimony and chivalry. If I let the fire go out, I build it again myself. I wonder just how much profanity and cynicism fires have limited.

On the way downstairs I noticed a rickety step and spoke of it immediately.

Marriage teaches a man to voice his most trivial complaints with startling promptitude. No matter how suave and shy and agreeable he's been in pre-nuptial days, there's something about marriage that gives him real courage, and when anything's wrong through the fault of his wife, his tongue takes up its biting task with marvellous facility. So with the cellar step.

I spoke some of unpleasantness, some of the immediate need of a carpenter, and some of the likelihood of my breaking my neck and leaving Mary a widow. This evoked absolutely no response from the kitchen, and I stopped sarcastically and inquired if Mary desired to be a widow. All of which was very foolish, but marriage seems to provoke a certain type of wrath—a futile, childish, unreasoning sort of wrath, and the house was cold and the fire was out, and I was tired.

From the kitchen came Mary's voice, nicely controlled, though I fancied I detected a shadow of guilt in it.

"Peter," she said, "I simply shall not answer you when you speak in that unreasonable manner. The fire's out and that's all there is to it. And if the cellar step's rickety, that's no reason why you should step on the broken step and grumble about my becoming a widow. If you stand on the step long enough likely I'll be one before the fire's built."

Which wasn't bad for Mary, but it made me exceedingly wrathful, and I went on down and flung things about. Then I built a fire so hot that she had to throw open all the windows to cool the house.

Now this is a record of the slipshod way in which Mary ignores important things that need correction. My anger availed one good thing. I was not called upon to build a new fire for weeks. I thought with a glow of relief that Mary was learning the science of heating until I discovered that she was coaxing the grocer boy into building a series of fires and permitting him to put his charges on the bill.

When next I descended the cellar stairs to build a fire I did not halt on the rickety step to discourse upon Mary's potential widowhood. I crashed heavily through it and nearly made the potentiality a reality.

I struck my head and wrenched my ankle and lay there biting my lips with pain and rage. My temper is growing worse by the day.

From the kitchen a startled scream had followed my crash.

"Oh, Peter!" cried Mary, "did you fall?"

Did I fall? Great Scakes! What a [illegible] torture such phrases are! I [illegible] to answer, and Mary came [illegible] down the stairs and narrowly escaped a tumble herself.

"Oh, Peter," she wailed, "are you dead?"

This was even less sensible, and I didn't answer. Mary hailed on the bottom step and bent solicitously over me.

"Peter," she said firmly, "you're not [illegible]—you're merely sulking. I'm sorry I forgot the step. Honestly I [illegible] each day to send for the carpenter, and—and I just forgot—and—and now I'll send for the doctor."

There was surely an inferential sermon in this speech.

Secrets of Health and Happiness

What Hydrophobia Is; How to Treat an Attack

By Dr. LEONARD KEENE HIRSHBERG

A. B., M. A., M. D. (Johns Hopkins).

DR. HIRSHBERG

NOT every man who was mad had rabies; not every dog that fears water has hydrophobia. None the less, the bite of a dog is just as liable to originate rabies in you in the winter as it is in the summer, or in the dog days.

Many who all come to physicians and hospitals and say, "I have heart disease." Another comes and she says: "Oh, doctor, I am paralyzed." Yet another comes and speaks thus: "Doctor, I cannot swallow; I have a furious aversion to water. I have not been scratched, licked or bitten by a dog, yet I have hydrophobia."

Yet it is not so. All of these who are ill have read or heard or thought about the distempers they insist upon having.

Often, indeed, unguarded medical men of easy dispositions fall in with and agree to the patient's personal—yet wrong—diagnosis. Thus little acorn errors into mighty oak fallacies grow.

Odd it is and sad besides that intermingled with the public conception of hydrophobia there should be a thousand and one misunderstandings and dangerous superstitions. This variety of human error is not the spice and flavor of life, but the ignorant poisoning which leads to death.

Not only clean pet dogs, but cats, rabbits, white mice, rats, cattle, horses, birds, guinea pigs and every known animal from mankind down can inoculate the Noguchi microbe of rabies or hydrophobia into you.

Fear Is no Cause.

This vicious and always fatal scourge—if not prevented by the Pasteur vaccine—cannot be caught by fear. No matter what newspaper accounts you may read to the contrary, rabies is a microbic malady, which is only real when these ultra-microscopic animalculae enter your tissues by way of the bite, the blood or the saliva of a rabid creature.

Hydrophobia, or the "madness" of rabies, does not drive people crazy.

There is no more firmly rooted terror in the popular mind than the one which makes your friends think that hydrophobia "drives people crazy."

It does nothing of the sort. Human beings with this "madness" are perfectly sane. That is until they die.

Any one bitten by a mad dog must at once have the wound burned out with nitric acid and immediately begin the Pasteur preventive vaccination.

Rabies does not develop at once. The Noguchi microbe begins to incubate and hatch for three and more weeks.

It is during this "latent" or "germ growing" interval that the Pasteur preventive vaccine gets in its fine work. It forces the tissue juices to make an anti-vaccine which kills the hydrophobia virus.

Five Days Limit.

The Pasteur treatment is a preventive vaccination and not a "cure" as the unbelievers in this dread plague assume. Dr. Moon of Chicago has lately cured a couple of dogs of rabies, but there never has been any human being who escaped death from this once "madness."

It kills everybody once hydrophobia develops. Furthermore, it kills within three days. If you hear of any "victim" of "alleged rabies" still suffering after five days, you may be sure it is not hydrophobia, and therefore possibly not an eternally fatal distemper.

Dogs and other animals suspected to be rabid should not be killed. If they are "mad," they will die in a few days. If it is some other affection, the animal recovers.

Answers to Health Questions

MOTHER—My little girl is 3 years in May. She is getting the whooping cough.

Keep her away from other children. Her chest must be kept warmer than usual. Despite the usual medical advice always to keep her out of doors, do not do so in damp, raw days. In the hot sun for an hour or so in dry, mild days will be all right. The whooping cough may last three months, so be very careful that she is not exposed too much. Pneumonia is the real dangerous complication.

(2) Have had gravel and now have a sharp pain on left side. Gravel has not returned.

(1) This may be an enlarged tonsil, swollen gland, or merely attention to some point in the throat. Forget it!

(2) "Gravel" is another absurd name like "rheumatism," "catarrh," "turn of life," and their congeners. The sharp pain may be due to many things which might be eliminated by purgatives internally and a mustard plaster externally. "Gravel" might mean stone in the bladder and it might mean nothing but a "moan."

Where Common Things Originated

The father of the piano was the harpsichord, and its grandfather the spinet. The piano was first used in a public concert on May 16, 1767, in the Covent Garden Theatre, London.

The first English book on stenography, so far as known, was written by Dr. Timothy Bright in 1588. Its earlier invention is attributed to the Latin poet Ennius, to Seneca, Cicero and several others.

The buttons on the backs and sleeves of men's coats are reminders of the time when the coat skirts and sleeves were buttoned back when walking or driving. The days have disappeared, the buttons have remained.

Pliny describes a boat to [illegible] which was propelled by wheels driven by a pot of hot water and some machinery which he did not understand and could not explain. It was probably the first attempt at a steamboat.

Guns are said to have been used by the Chinese before the beginning of the Christian era. The oldest [illegible] of [illegible] in [illegible] dating declaring that the gun was cast in 1313.

Coats of arms were first employed in England during the reign of Richard I., and became hereditary in families in the [illegible]. They originated from the painted banners carried by knights and nobles.

Parachutes took their name from the sleep of a Roman [illegible] named [illegible], the square in front of which contained a sepulchral statue, on the pedestal of which all sorts of squibs and lampoons were posted.

Costuming the Actress

By Madge Marvel

PLACE a wise label on the actor and give him the same rights for justice in his work that the bricklayer and other workers enjoy.

Do the same for actresses and save them from nervous prostration brought on by having to worry their pretty brows and over going in debt for dresses only to wear them a few times in some theatrical failure.

That is the system which Fola LaFollette, daughter of the senator from Wisconsin and wife of George Middleton, playwright, and ardent feminist, hopes to see put into operation through the newly formed Actors' Equity Association, in which she is a lively factor.

"The time has come when acting is a part of big business," contended Miss LaFollette-Middleton to me, her blue eyes gleaming with enthusiasm, and her halo of golden hair nodding at every vehemence with the earnestness of the big progressive problem she is forever [illegible].

"Every other trade has the protection of the union. Theatrical workers, with the exception of the actors, are [illegible] organized. The time has [illegible] the actor [illegible] and [illegible] is being [illegible] and [illegible].

"Of course any [illegible] are directly with the [illegible] and their [illegible] problems. So [illegible] is [illegible] of [illegible] them [illegible] of [illegible], and they have such [illegible] to keep going.

"Once almost any makeshift would do, but now the actress has become the [illegible] of the newest and smartest fashions. She sets the mode. No longer can she pin some [illegible] pieces on a piece of white cloth and call it ermine. Furs must be just as real on the stage lady as on the society woman.

"And the actress pays for all this perfection of dress. She takes the chance of the play being the success the manager is always sure it will be, and puts out the right clothes for the part she has to play. Frequently she goes in debt for them. If the play is a success this is not a serious matter. But if after five nights it closes it is different. There are the dresses with their freshness intact and the bills for them to be met. They are not fit for any occasion in private life, and they will not be allowed in any other production in which she may be [illegible] to find an engagement. They are declared identified with the other play, though they may not have been seen a dozen times. [illegible] another set of [illegible] clothes to be bought.

"Let's do a bit of figuring.

"The salary she receives is sufficient if one could be sure of a long season. The leading woman may receive $200 or $300 a week. She is also in even the less important productions to get [illegible]. That sounds very magnificent to the girl who is struggling along on $10, but when everything is considered it is pitifully small.

"It will take at least calculation every cent of four or five weeks' salary to pay for the gowns. But there may be no such length of life for the play. Then what?

"It is delightful to think that the stage has reached so important a place in setting the styles for the feminine world, but it sets them at a [illegible] cost to the actress. Worry over finances is not conducive to Art. Justice through [illegible] seems to me to be the solution."

Battle Lines of Allied Have Been Considerably Advanced

Paris, Dec. 8.—The allies have further advanced their lines in Belgium and Northern France on the western end of the [illegible] line, and also in the Argonne, where desperate fighting is reported by the official communique from the war office to-day.

A position between Dixmude and Ypres, long contested for by the opposing armies, has been taken and held in the face of counter attacks by the Germans. North of the Lys, two lines of trenches have been captured and similar gains have been made by the Argonne. Vimy is again bombarded. The statement declares:

"Considerable progress has been made north of the Lys, the Germans falling two lines of trenches as in an attack by daylight.

"A position between Dixmude and Ypres, disputed for a month has been taken and held despite the enemy's artillery.

"Rheims was severely bombarded yesterday.

"In the Argonne the fighting was extremely hot. The French took several trenches and maintained the points already won."

The only important change in the line is only slightly west of Arras, [illegible] the [illegible] Ypres and Dixmude is nearly a mile.

Cannonading is reported at intervals throughout the Aisne plain and the Champagne district. Calm continues in Lorraine and Alsace, the communique says.

London, Dec. 8.—The [illegible]

French advance along the entire front [illegible] has developed in the last [illegible] days until it has become an [illegible] event of greater importance than the battle in Flanders, because of the greater possibility of a decided success.

The advance of the French up to Altkirch which was reported on Thursday, was soon after the bombardment of Arracourt, and was followed by an [illegible] of infantry in the [illegible] of Metz.

It is believed that one of the movements of the German troops in Belgium, which have been reported from Holland recently, has been in the direction of Alsace instead of to Poland, as this position offers which the Germans are meeting the French advance proves that they have made preparations to oppose the offensive action there.

A despatch from Basle, Switzerland, received by way of Berlin, states that the Germans are [illegible] in the [illegible] of [illegible] though in [illegible] of [illegible].

The Overworked Pill

Of course you have seen the pill fiend. He carries in his vest pocket a collection of tiny bottles or pasteboard boxes and every little while he dopes himself.

If his tummy is on a strike, he pops a pill.

If he has a pain in the head —a pill.

For every ailment between a tickling of the nostrils to the Asiatic cholera, his treatment consists of pills, pills, pills.

Often the wise doctor who prescribes them takes good care, and sees that they are wholly harmless, mere bits of hocus pocus. We have not a word to say in criticism of the pills of that kind. They are like the rabbit's foot in the left pistol pocket or the piece of pork rubbed on the wart and planted beneath the evespout in the light of the moon—bully fine if you get any satisfaction out of them.

But there are pills that are not so innocent—the pills that really contain active drugs. We shall not say that a person ought never to take a real pill—there may be times, rare times, times of emergency, when to shock kindly nature with a dose of physic brings a wholesome reaction.

But it is worth notice that the best doctors are going more and more lightly on drugs. Exercise, diet, correct habits of living and, in a pinch, massage or other mechanical manipulation, if begun early and kept up, generally make the use of drugs unnecessary for they accomplish all that drugging can do without leaving to weakened nature the task of throwing the drug out of the system.

So we beg of you, do not rely on pills for what you ought to do yourself. For if you do there's bound to come a time when the pesky pill won't work.

Christmas Parcels by Mail

In view of the officially stated fact that every year the postoffices have the problem of disposing of thousands of packages which have lost their addressed coverings and show nothing to identify the senders or those for whom they are intended, the public should give particular attention to the advice that parcels for mailing be securely wrapped and the names and addresses of senders should be written upon them and included in them. By giving strict regard to these admonitions countless cases of disappointment and loss may be avoided.

As usual, the postoffice department voices the injunction to "mail your parcels early." Congestion of the mails in the last days and hours is inevitable—to ensure certainty of timely delivery allow your parcels ample time for reaching their destinations. The postmaster general has given notice that books or sets of books may now be sent by parcel post, packages of eight ounces or less taking a rate of one cent for each two ounces or fraction thereof, regular zone rates applying above that weight.

"Do not open until Christmas," may be inscribed on parcels, and inserted within them may be such written or printed messages as 'Merry Christmas' or 'Happy New Year,' or 'With Best Wishes.' A written communication to accompany a parcel should be enclosed in an envelope with first-class postage, and the envelope tied securely to the outside of the parcel.

Keep these rules in mind, and especially the necessity that parcels be stoutly wrapped and addressed plainly.

Italy's Neutrality

Apprehension that after the parliament of Italy convened the nation might quickly become involved in the war is hardly allayed by the character of the proceedings at the opening of the session yesterday. The policy of the government is to keep out, if possible; the sentiment of the country, apparently, is such that to avoid embroilment may be a constantly difficult and delicate task. The premier recommended the maintenance of an attitude of "loyal but watchful and armed neutrality." As he alluded to what he termed the just aspirations of Italy, the entire membership of one of the parties arose to cry "Viva Trent," "Viva Trieste" — and Trent and Trieste are in a section of Austria essentially Italian, which Italy ever aspires to recover.

As adjournment was about to be made, a deputy asked that greetings be sent to "heroic and unfortunate Belgium," and the entire Chamber, including the president, the ministers and the spectators, united in shouting "Viva Belgium." The incidents noted were manifestly not illustrative of the spirit of genuine neutrality. Italy designs to stand aside, fully armed, ready for action if the complexities of the situation in which the country is placed, develop a need for defense or a strongly promising opportunity for national aggrandizement by espousing the cause of the Allies against Austria and Germany. "Italy has vital interests to protect," the premier said, "and justly aspires to maintain her position as a great power and to preserve intact her policies. She must therefore be ready for any eventualities, and the supreme task of the government is to have the army and navy in a state of preparation."

Thus, Italy's neutrality is shown to be dictated by expediency rather than by sentiment and public disposition.

INTRODUCTION

The Glenaladale Silver Black Fox Company, Limited, was incorporated in 1913 with six pairs of foxes, at [illegible]. This Company re-capitalized in 1914, with 20 pairs of beautiful Silver Black Foxes, at $15,000 per pair, making a total capitalization of $300,000.

THE FOXES

Six pairs (one year old) proven breeders, and fourteen pairs (1914 pups), making a total of 20 pairs—all young foxes—good for at least [illegible] years. This Company has bought [illegible] of the highest [illegible] and very best quality P. E. Island [illegible].

THE RANCH

The ranch is situated on the well known Glenaladale Farm, owned by Major C. McKinnon, formerly the [illegible] of Sir William McDonald, and is only 12 miles from Charlottetown, in a quiet locality sufficiently removed from any disturbance.

THE RANCHER

Mr. Arthur V. McKinnon, our Ranch Manager, has had much experience in breeding foxes, and has the practical knowledge necessary to efficiently manage and care for the animals.

The foxes will be ranched free of charge to the Company for the first year. This means a large saving to the shareholders, as some companies have to pay as high as [illegible] per cent. of the income for ranching purposes.

The promoters of this Company [illegible] stock [illegible] dividend of [illegible] per cent. will be paid in cash in 1915, or whatever more it may be.

The Glenaladale Silver Black Fox Co., Limited, in 1913 guaranteed a dividend of [illegible] per cent. but are going to pay [illegible] per cent. in cash and [illegible] per cent. in stock in 1914. The Company is in good standing and to each and every investor the first of September, 1914, we can say—"We have given you [illegible] per cent. more than we promised." And we feel sure that in 1915 all the shareholders in the re-capitalized company will be able to say they received more than they were promised.

This Company can truthfully say that they have not one cent of watered stock in the Company. Now Mr. Investor, if you were a Company and we the shareholders, we would look to you for justice to give us all that was honestly due us. We would not like for you to buy 2 pairs of foxes at $15,000 per pair ($30,000) and form a fox company and capitalize your concern at [illegible] and make us pay [illegible] dividends for it. The Glenaladale Silver Black Fox Company, Limited, will ask you to do nothing like that. We want to let you in on the ground floor.

NOTICE

When a fox company guarantees any specified dividend to its shareholders, and when said company is an incorporated body, you need not be afraid of any unfair play, for such company is compelled to pay what they promise, and, besides, every interest is taken for the welfare of both the investor and the company.

The promoters of this Company are all above board and will not permit any crook to come in and do anything that is not right. Anyone holding stock in this Company who is dissatisfied can, by notifying the Secretary-Treasurer, have his or her money promptly refunded.

FORTUNES IN FOXES

There is money in fox ranching more than anything else ever known. It is good for the rich man and good for the poor man. A poor man cannot buy a pair of Silver Black Foxes but he can easily raise [illegible] or $100.00. By investing in this Company he gets back his money in at least two years and then he will have an income for life and for his children to come—and after them will be money in fox farming. One of the reasons for this is that P. E. Island has now 95 per cent. of the world's foxes in captivity. For every one pelt that can be raised there are more than 25 wealthy people waiting for it in London, Russia, France and America.

PELT VALUES

The Fox Pelts have advanced greatly in price since 1910 and you can see for yourself what money was in them then.

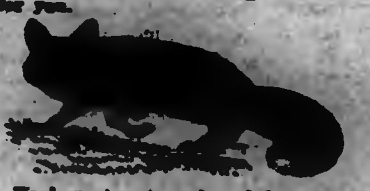
A POINTER

Just to give you a little idea of what the fine ranching of foxes means to the investor, we will figure it out for you.



We have twenty pairs of foxes in the ranch and suppose each pair produce a litter of only four, [illegible] this is equal to 40 pups, and at $15,000 per pair it would figure out at $300,000. Now, if you had to even 15 per cent. of the income for ranching purposes (which is considerably lower than some companies pay) it would mean that we would have to pay $45,000 for ranching expenses.

We ranch the foxes free for the first year, so that in addition to a guaranteed dividend of [illegible] per cent., we save you this large outlay of money. While we guarantee [illegible] per cent., should each pair in our ranch produce four pups it would mean that your dividend would be about 200 per cent. instead of [illegible] per cent.

FINAL WORD

A great deal has been written about Ranches, Grades of Foxes, etc., but after all the one object that every investor should keep before him is the dividend he is going to get. We have tried to show you in plain English what we can do for you and now that you have our proposition, compare it with the offer made by any other company now in business—and then judge for yourself [illegible] by some of the Charlottetown daily newspapers.

They Shall Not Want

These must be Days of Brotherhood. These are times of standing together, working, thinking, fighting together. The challenge of an enemy provokes quick response in every breast and proclaims the brotherhood of rich and poor.

You can hear the tread of armed men in the streets. To-day they prepare; to-morrow they depart, and another day—they fight! They are not merely your sons who go, or our neighbors' sons, but OUR sons! We who remain here, thousands of miles from the reek of gun-fire, have no less a part to play than those who go. We are not excused because we cannot fight. We must fill the places of those who go.

IN THIS CRISIS THEY ARE AS MUCH OUR DEPENDENTS AS THOSE WHO LEAVE THEM TO GO TO WAR. SHALL THE HEROES, WHEN THEY COME MARCHING BACK, BRONZED AND SCARRED, FIND THAT WE, ACCEPTING THEIR DEFENCE FOR OURSELVES, HAVE YET NEGLECTED THE DEFENCE OF THEIR DEPENDENTS! THEIR STRUGGLE IS OUR STRUGGLE, THEIR SACRIFICE IS OUR SACRIFICE — AND THEIR WIVES AND BABIES, OUR CHARGE.

ENGLAND'S GREAT NAMES

Interesting Debate on Which County Produced Most Illustrious Men

Many readers will probably dispute the decision arrived at by the judges at a debate on the subject of which English county has produced the greatest men before the Society of Warwickshire Folk in London, who, after listening to the champions of celebrities of thirteen counties, gave their verdict in favor of Lancashire. Lancashire was the native county of John Bright, whose oratory fascinated and enthralled men, among other famous statesmen which it claims being Gladstone, who was born at Liverpool, Sir Robert Peel, born near Bury, and Lord Morley, who claims Blackburn as his native place.

In literature the county is very strongly represented: De Quincey, Mrs. Hemans, the famous poetess, Hall Caine, Harrison Ainsworth, and Richard Le Gallienne, being among other famous authors who were born in Lancashire. Neither must one forget Sir Richard Arkwright, the inventor of the cotton-spinning frame; Romney, the famous painter; and such actors as John Kemble, Sothern, and Edmund Kean, three of the greatest who ever appeared on the English stage.

Hampshire and Derbyshire

Hampshire is proudly referred to by its people and admirers as the cradle of the English race—the cradle of the ecclesiastical system, cradle of the English Navy, and the cradle of the national game of cricket. Palmerston, Thomas Arnold, Charles Dickens, George Meredith, Millais, and Tennyson, who, though he was born in Lincolnshire, had his favorite residence in the Isle of Wight, are men who have added lustre to little Hampshire.

Mr. Morice Gerard (the Rev. J. Jessop Teague), author of many popular books, proudly claims for Derbyshire that it is the county which started everything. In other words, that its famous men were the pioneers in all things. It produced James Brindley, founder of canals; Sir Francis Chantrey, one of the finest sculptors who ever lived. Herbert Spencer, the founder of that school in which Huxley and Darwin graduated; Sir Hugh Willoughby, the first of a long line of explorers who set out in the sixteenth century from Deptford to find the Northwest passage; Sir James Outram, the Bayard of India; and last but not least, "Little John," Robin Hood's great small man.

Claims of Warwickshire

On the other hand, Warwickshire claims to have produced Robin Hood himself, and among other greater celebrities Shakespeare, acknowledged to be among the greatest of Englishmen, Walter Savage Landor, George Eliot, Sir Edwin Arnold, David Cox, Sir Francis Galton, Burne-Jones, James Watt, Richard Baxter, and Cardinal Newman.

Mr. Joseph Chamberlain was certainly born in Camberwell, but his finest work was done in Warwickshire, where he spent the greater part of his life.

Gallant little Sussex, however, not only claims to have produced the man who evolved the mangel-wurzel, but such men as Cobden and Shelley; and is also not a little proud of the fact that F. W. Lillywhite, one of the fathers of cricket, was a Sussex man. But the Channel Islands do not feel inclined to give way to any English county in regard to sporting champions, for it was from Jersey that those two wonderful golfers Ray and Vardon came.

Good old "Zummerset" claims Henry Fielding, father of the English novel, who was born a few miles from Glastonbury. It also produced Roger Bacon, father of science; Chatterton, the boy poet; Sebastian Cabot, the great explorer; Sir Henry Irving, too, came from Somerset, as well as John Locke, one of the greatest philosophers of his time, not to mention John Bull, who was erroneously believed to be the author of "God Save the King," and who was a Somersetshire man and a notable scientist.

Nelson a Norfolk Man

Those pioneers of liberty, Coke, Walpole, and Tom Paine, as well as Nelson, Lord Cromer, and George Borrow, hailed from Norfolk; while Yorkshire is represented by the two famous explorers and pioneers, Captain Cook and Frobisher. William Wilberforce, too, was a Yorkshire man, while mention might also be made of Lord Hawke, the famous English admiral.

It has been [illegible] suggested that Staffordshire's greatest claim to fame is that Jonathan Wild [illegible] hanged at Tyburn [illegible] but [illegible] fully forget that this county was the birthplace of Samuel Johnson, Izaak Walton, father of fishermen.

SALMON INDUSTRY

Quebec Man Started First Packing House on Pacific Coast

Notwithstanding the fact that the first salmon cannery on the Pacific Coast was erected in United States territory—on the Sacramento river—it is interesting to note that it was the creation of one who had learned the canning business in Eastern Canada. This man, Hapgood, had worked in a lobster factory in the Baie des Chaleurs, Que. A school mate named Hume, from Augusta, Maine, who had been to California and returned home, had told Hapgood of the abundance of salmon on the Pacific coast, and Hapgood saw no reason why salmon should not be canned as well as lobster, and entering into partnership with Hume, erected the first Pacific coast cannery in 1864. A year or two later witnessed the establishment of the industry in British Columbia.

In 1876 the total pack of the province was but 10,000 cases of 48 pounds to a case, while now the production of the canneries is around a million cases per year. Many changes are observable in the industry. With the increasing demand for salmon, other kinds than Sockeyes have been increasingly canned, and now a considerable proportion of the pack consists of hitherto neglected kinds of salmon. Then again the Indians and white fishermen are being gradually displaced by Japanese.

Perhaps the most remarkable development is that of the Dog Salmon industry. These fish were until recently regarded with contempt, but so great is the demand from the Japanese market, that more than 3,000 tons, dry salted, have been exported in a single year from British Columbia. Just as the turkey is the universal Christmas dish with us, so a salted dog salmon is the chief item at New Year's feasts in Japan. The average price of a seven pound dog salmon in Japan is said to be fifty cents.

ORIENTAL MENACE

Presbyterians on Coast See a Real Asiatic Peril

The Westminster Presbytery, representing that denomination in Vancouver and all the lower mainland, passed a long resolution as to their policy on Oriental immigration. They view with alarm the ever-increasing arrival of Orientals, whose influence is felt in social, economic and even moral conditions. They add:

"The situation is already exceedingly serious. One in every nine of our population is an Oriental, and as a large proportion of their members are men, it means that one man out of every five in British Columbia is an Oriental.

"This Presbytery would therefore urge that an understanding be arrived at between our Government and the various governments interested to exclude Oriental laborers until the population of Orientals to Occidentals is one to thirty of the population of British Columbia. In case of Hindus already residing here, we urge they be allowed to bring in their wives, providing that no other members of this race will be permitted to enter Canada until the above condition is reached, when the question may be re-opened."

NEW ICE CUTTER

Saw Carried in Frame That is Mounted on Pair of Wheels

The old style way of cutting ice was by the use of a long hand-saw, sometimes operated by two men. A western man has designed a machine for the purpose and it is said that with this machine one man can cut ice quicker than two men could with the hand-saw. A frame with spaced side bars, is mounted on a pair of wheels. Between the bars, at their lower end, a saw is mounted and this saw is driven up and down by a chain gear that is operated by the turning of a handle at the top. Adjustable gage shoes are pivoted at one end to one of the side bars and these shoes keep the saw running straight, so that the cut it makes is at all times the same distance from the former cut that it must parallel. The saw in this machine, instead of being of the regulation stiff blade type, is in the form of a chain.

THE RIGHT WAY TO STRIKE A MATCH.

Once in a while we have complaints about our matches breaking in two. This is no fault of the Match, as EDDY'S MATCHES are made from specially selected straight-grained wood only. For the benefit of those who are still in ignorance of the proper way to hold a match (and there are many) we give the following rule:—

"The forefinger of the right hand should be placed"

"when the flame comes. This prevents any undue"
"leverage on the match, and instinct prevents one"
"getting ones finger burned."

Germs of decay accumulate on oft-used pots and pans, and ordinary soap and water only clean off the surface.

Gold Dust does the work—and does it right. It digs deep after germs, cleans like a new whistle and leaves your pots and pans as new, as bright as the day they were new—and sanitarily safe.

Gold Dust does this work in just half the time required by soap or any other cleanser. Does it better, too.

NATURAL BASIN NEAR CALGARY

Immense Water Supply is Only Thirty-five Miles Away

That the citizens of Calgary have a natural basin with an estimated storage capacity of 500,000,000 gallons of water, enough to supply the city for an entire winter, only 35 miles up the Elbow river, was an interesting report made by Mr. A. W. Ellison Fawkes.

For some months Mr. Fawkes had a crew of surveyors and assistant engineers working out the data on a pipe line scheme and also a proposed filtration and pumping scheme as an alternative.

On a trip up the Elbow Mr. Fawkes inspected three feasible sites for the location of an impounding dam. The nearest of these for a pipe line is about 35 miles distant, and here the Elbow widens into a big basin with the immense storage capacity mentioned. It would be necessary to have a dam at this point 400 feet long. Five miles farther up the river and again three miles above this point there are other suitable sites. But, of course, the closer site, 35 miles up, has the advantage, when the cost of constructing a pipe line is considered. The upper sites would on the other hand be narrower and would not require as long a dam.

ADVERTISING A NATION

How Canada is Made Known Across the Waters

In the course of a lecture made by J. Obed Smith, immigration commissioner of Canada he said: "Because there is very little red tape in this department a great deal of responsibility rests upon the officials. While Ottawa controls the policy, the details, including expenditures, are worked out in London. Outside the British Isles we have agencies at work in Paris, Belgium and in the Scandinavian countries. There is a good deal of work required in advising and planning discipline for 4,000 booking agents who can be made into good advertising agents for Canada.

"In advertising Canada, the department of the Interior offers no apology, particularly in the old land, where there are fewer opportunities for farm laborers.

"Correspondence also plays a big part in the propaganda, for while it [illegible] publicity work, it is [illegible] most productive. So much information has been diffused about Canada that those writing are not content with one or two questions, but set out voluminous inquiries. This indicates that the countries have been reached by advertising, and they in their turn have led others to [illegible]. Our department, while primarily concerned with advertising Canada alone, is also obliged to set out the advantages of each province. The policy of the department is set along such lines as to make advertising by a government as well as a business firm.

"Our work is largely carried on by bringing before the public the advantages of farming in Canada. Our agents attend every show or fair, distribute literature and also give advice to those requiring it. These results are most satisfactory, but perhaps our most effective work consists of carrying information to every town and village by means of motor and horse wagons. These are in charge of experienced Canadian officials, who stop outside schools, and having obtained permission from the teachers, address the children on Canada, although nothing is said about immigration. Later on we get good results from this campaign.

"Another important phase in advertising is that of giving illustrated lectures. Hundreds are given each season, principally in the winter, and afford us the means of getting into closer touch with the intending emigrant. The most valuable adjunct is the after meeting, when the people gather round and ask questions. We also endeavor to supply news items to the reading public.

"There are good and bad advertisements. The latter consist of derogatory letters and complaints from those who have not succeeded. However, Canada does not want the inefficient to fail, but, on the other hand [illegible] to point to the successful settler as illustration of what can be done out here."

The Whirligig of Time

In place of the hitching post and the carriage stepping stone has come the gasoline filling station. In place of the livery stable has come the modern garage, and the old-fashioned roadside smithy has been turned into a modern automobile repair shop.

The motor car has brought many changes, but with the changes has come prosperity. The foundry that once turned out ornamental hitching posts with a horse's head, or a little iron negro jockey patiently waiting to hold old Dobbin's reins, is manufacturing automobile parts.

The gasoline motor has played its part in making the automobile the popular method of transportation, but without the pneumatic tire the motor car would be limited to improved city streets and boulevards.

GROWTH OF LANGUAGE

English Dictionary of 1616 Contained Only [illegible] Words

Roughly speaking, the English language may be said to grow at the rate of 5,000 words a year. At least, that is the average growth by the evidence of the dictionaries. Bullokar's "Compleat English Dictionary," in 1616, the year of Shakespeare's death, contained [illegible] words. [illegible] "Glossographia" (1656) [illegible] on this and was superseded in its turn by Edward Phillips' "New World of English Words" (1658), a small folio containing 12,000 words; and by the time it reached its sixth edition (1706) the number had grown to 38,000 odd. Johnson's dictionary, published on April 15, 1755, though it improved all predecessors off the face of the earth by the perfection of its system and the soundness and breadth of its wording contained only 50,000 words, and it remained master of the field, even at this modest total, until Noah Webster's came along in 1828, and Worcester's "Comprehensive Pronouncing and Explanatory English Dictionary," in 1830, with 100,000 and 105,000 words respectively.

The latter part of the nineteenth century kept the ball rolling. The "Imperial Dictionary" contained 130,000 words, and Dr. Funk's "Standard Dictionary" (1894) entered the field with half as many again—[illegible] words in all. There have been half a dozen editions of this, and the next new one will reach the high water mark with a total of 450,000 words, most of which are English beyond question.

Baseball in Prison

The American passion for baseball has been turned to good purpose at a Delaware prison. The warden decided to gratify the inmates' love of the sport as a reward for good conduct. All prisoners who obey the rules and observe the discipline of the institution are permitted to play or witness the games. While armed guards patrol the top of the wall about the exercise-yard where the sports are held, they have not been called upon to quell any trouble.

STRENUOUS DUTIES OF INFANTRY C.O.

The "Old Man's" Responsibilities Heavy, His Pay For Services Light

The officer commanding a British infantry battalion, who is known as the O.C., C.O., or, behind his back, the "old man," receives $6.35 a day pay, exclusive of certain allowances.

His gross income is well under $2500 a year, and he is certainly not overpaid, for he must be exceptionally lucky to get command before he is forty, and his responsibilities are heavy.

The C.O.'s daily day varies greatly according to climate and other circumstances, but, as a rule, he starts work with "orderly room" at 9 or 9.30 a.m.

The "orderly-room" is the regimental police court, and, like those of a police magistrate, the C.O.'s penal powers are limited. He must investigate every charge brought before him, but in the case of serious offences, such as desertion, he must either dismiss the charge altogether, reduce it to one of absence without leave, with which he has power to deal, or remand the prisoner for trial by court-martial.

The severest punishment the C.O. can award is fourteen days "cells," save in the case of absence without leave, when he can order imprisonment up to twenty-one days.

A "non-com." can be summarily punished by reprimand or severe reprimand only, otherwise he must be sent for trial by court-martial. The C.O., however, can reduce a non-com. who holds acting rank. Officers are subject to "wiggings" only, and the "Officer's call" is usually the precursor of the "rough side of the old man's tongue."

"Orderly-room" is usually humdrum enough, but, sometimes, there is excitement.

I remember one occasion when a man was marched in charged with a fairly serious offence, says a writer in Answers. Asked whether he had anything to say, he replied by kicking over the C.O.'s table. It was quite some seconds before the [illegible] escort and sergeant-major recovered their presence of mind, [illegible] the rebel, and carried him out [illegible]. I don't know [illegible], but when he was [illegible] again all the "fight" had gone out of him. [illegible] the subsequent court-martial sentence.

[illegible]

After "orderly-room" comes "C.O.'s parade," that is, if it is one of the appointed days, for the C.O.'s office duties will rarely permit of his personally commanding parade more than two or three times a week, except, of course, on manoeuvres.

"Papers" are the bugbear of the C.O.'s life. As there are only twenty-four hours in a day it is usually impossible for him to read half of what is put before him. Generally he has to trust to his subordinates, the orderly-room sergeant in particular, that everything is in order. Even so, merely signing his name will absorb three or four hours a day.

Of course, he has many special duties to perform.

Once a week, usually Saturday, he will visit the barrack-rooms for his inspection, and on Sunday he usually goes round the "married patch."

There are recruits to be inspected before they are dismissed drill, and if musketry is on, he will pay frequent visits to the range.

There are recruit officers to be examined, and once a week the C.O. lectures to and examines the officers as a whole.

He presides at "officers' mess meetings, and, one way and another, his time is fully occupied. But his real work is unofficial.

He should be the "father" of his regiment, and, without prying, he should know everything that is going on in it. He should know when to administer that unofficial word in season which will pull an erring youngster straight.

As a rule, the C.O. is married, but if he is a bachelor his position calls for great tact, for then he lives among his subordinates. So far as possible he lays aside his rank in the mess, but at the same time he is generally responsible for the maintenance of good order and discipline.

The man who commands a battalion shoulders responsibilities [illegible] which in civil [illegible] him a handsome [illegible]. But the C.O.'s expenses are such [illegible] scarcely live on his pay [illegible] and at the end of his time he usually has nothing to look forward to but retirement on $1,000 a year.

LAWLESS LONDONERS

Mr. Justice Darling Likens Modern Doings to Those of Middle Ages

A glimpse of lawless life in the neighborhood of Brick lane, London's famous Sunday dog market, was afforded the Old Bailey, which knows it well, when Mr. Justice Darling sentenced two Hoxton men, named Daniel Curtis and Edward Curtis, to twelve months' hard labor, a third, Richard Curtis, to eighteen months', and a member of their gang, John Craig, to three months. The affair arose out of "civil war" between rival gangs in the district. One gang struck the notion of raising funds by blackmailing a number of street betting men who "did business" there. The Curtises and Craig were four of the betting men.

Manifestly shy of calling in the police against the blackmailers, the betting men set about collecting a force of mercenaries, whom they employed to fight the gang. The rivals knew no law against each other but the law of the strongest. One night the betting men and some of their mercenaries caught a man named Charles Callaghan alone in a public house. He was one of the men whom they accused of forcing a levy upon them. Callaghan was immediately attacked, beaten on the head with an iron bar, and shot. He was left in the street, and eventually carried to hospital, where he recovered from his wounds, while the police ran down the four prisoners.

Addressing the prisoners, the Judge said: "You live in the neighborhood of lawless men, and apparently in order to carry on your business you have to pay blackmail to a gang of people of whom Callaghan is one. The state of society in this part of London is very much that of many mediaeval towns, very much the state of Verona, when the Montagues and Capulets flourished, very much the state of Florence at one time.

"It has, I daresay, certain picturesque attractions for you and men like you, and people who choose to go there and write about them, but in England you cannot be allowed to shoot people and beat people on the head, even if they do get their living by blackmail.

"This man was very grievously wounded; had he died all four of you would probably have been hanged—and society would not have had cause to regret your disappearance."

Fraud on Undertakers

A man, who represented that his wife had just died, called at the offices of two firms of undertakers in Barrhead to make arrangements for the funeral. In each instance a parcel was made up for him with the usual grave clothes required on such occasions. The man made requests for a loan of money to enable him to carry out other arrangements pending payment of the insurance. This request was refused, but the order for the habiliments was taken [illegible] and [illegible] the undertaker's visit at the address given caused a good deal of annoyance. [illegible]

Yesterday a Times reporter had a chat at the Oriental Hotel with Mr. Bacon who is engaged in a three day series of lectures at the local Methodist churches. Our scribe asked, on learning that Mr. Bacon had spent some weeks in the trenches in France, "how did you happen to go to the war when you are not a soldier?" Mr. Bacon replied "My brother, who is Colonel in a British Regiment in France was severely wounded in an action near Flanders. Hearing he was seriously wounded and likely to die, I got a pass through the lines and saw him, before he died, in a hospital. An English Colonel, hearing me sing to my brother, asked to stay for a while and sing to the soldiers in the trenches."

DANDRUFF SOON RUINS THE HAIR

Makes It Lifeless, Dull, Dry, Brittle and Thin.

Girls—if you want plenty of thick, beautiful, glossy, silky hair, do by all means get rid of dandruff, for it will starve your hair and ruin it if you do not.

It doesn't do much good to try to brush or wash it out. The only sure way to get rid of dandruff, then, is to dissolve it, then you destroy it entirely. To do this, get about four ounces of ordinary liquid arvon; apply it at night when retiring; use enough to moisten the scalp and rub it gently with the finger tips.

By morning most, if not all of your dandruff will be gone, and three or four more applications will completely dissolve and entirely destroy every single sign and trace of it.

You will find, too, that all itching and digging of the scalp will stop and your hair will be silky, fluffy, lustrous, soft, and look and feel a hundred times better. You can get liquid arvon at any drug store. It is inexpensive and four ounces is all you will need, no matter how much dandruff you have. This simple remedy never fails.

MUSIC AND DRAMA

— The —
CHOCOLATE SOLDIER

The voice of the people is the voice of the theatrical manager, and the voice of the American people is uplifted again this season to proclaim "The Chocolate Soldier," the supreme type of [illegible] which [illegible] and [illegible] are blended in the [illegible] equipped with splendors of scenery and costume, that makes Mr. Whitney's determination to make the present production rival that of previous seasons will present "The Chocolate Soldier" at the Grand Opera House on Saturday December 12th, matinee and night.

Though operas in no small number have flocked from Vienna to win fame through America's partiality for Viennese music, none of them has ever disturbed the success and popularity of Oscar Straus' fascinating musical embodiment of the exploits, the loves, and comic deeds of the Chocolate Soldier, as set forth by George Shaw in many a situation of sparkling and vigorous comedy in his satiric romance, "Arms and the Man." Shaw's merry flings at time-honored notions of war, heroes, courage, love, and so-forth, and the dramatic encounters of his people in which they display the harmless weaknesses of human nature at every turn, furnish a lively background for the blithe and joyous melody of Strauss. The composer, with astonishing ease, has found a musical vehicle for every emotion of the piece. Rollicking fun, tender sentiment, anger, sadness, patriotism, all have been set to delicious strains. "My Hero," "The Letter Song," "That Will Be Lovely," and a score of others have endeared themselves to hundreds of thousands in every part of the land.

The Whitney Opera Company is a rarity among light opera companies, [illegible] stars are unknown, [illegible] ranks, and every member is an artist of equal importance. PASTEURIZING MILK

Easy Method For Home Use—Makes Milk Perfectly Safe For Baby

There are times when families are obliged to use milk secured from unknown sources. Although milk cannot be made perfect by pasteurization, the dangers from it can be lessened by this process.

It is estimated that one-third of all children born die before they are three years old, and one of the chief causes of mortality among infants is unwholesome milk. For these very reasons it is fitting that mothers should know the simple way of pasteurizing milk.

The following brief directions will serve:

Plug bottles nearly full of milk with absorbent or other cotton. Place them in an upright position in a vessel which has a false bottom and which contains enough water to rise above the milk in the bottles.

Heat the vessel until the water is 155 degrees Fahrenheit or to boiling point if special precautions are required, but do not let it boil more than a moment.

Remove from the fire and keep tightly covered for half an hour. At the end of that time take the bottles from the vessel and cool as quickly as possible either by cold water or ice. Keep in a cold place.

Milk prepared in this way will usually keep about twenty-four hours and is best used within that time.

A covered tin pail may be used as the vessel, and an [illegible] pie pan with perforated bottom may be used as the false bottom.

The escape of a man named Pat Owens from the Galway Workhouse Hospital at midnight created a sensation there. Russians Deny the Capture of Lodz by the Germans--Allies in The West Are Steadily Advancing--German Counter Offensive Checked

RUSSIAN FORCES INVESTING CRACOW REINFORCED BY 200,000 TROOPS

General Dimitrieff Arrives to Assist in Attack--Tremendous Loss of Life Around Lodz, the Occupation of Which is Still Unsettled--Russians Claim Big Victory in That Region--German Dead Waist High

It is reported here today that Gen. Dimitrieff has reached the city with a force of more than 200,000 men. The Austrian forces outside the city have withdrawn, it is declared.

The War Office still refuses to admit the capture of Lodz by the German forces. The engagement is still in progress in that region. It is stated that the Russian losses in this fighting have been heavy, but some estimates place the German casualties in the general fighting as high as 100,000.

German Dead Piled Waist High

After the retreat of the Germans upon Strykow, bodies were found piled in heaps waist high, survivors still endeavoring to fight their way out of the Russian wedge closing in on them, and in some instances entrenched themselves behind piles of the bodies of their comrades.

Battle in East Not Decided

London, Dec. 8.—(Special Cable.)—Whether Lodz has been occupied by the Germans or is still held by the Russians, it is evident today that the fighting in the east is still far from a decision.

There is no confirmation at Petrograd of the capture of Lodz by the Germans. Instead, the Russians claim a victory in that region. The Berliner Tageblatt today modifies the German claims by saying: "Our victory may be considered a rupture in the Russian lines. It can only positively be called a victory, however, if the Russian retreat is followed by a German pursuit. If the pursuit is successful then the German centre is quite strong enough to act with force against the northern and southern parts of the broken Russian army."

The engagements southwest of Pietrkow and in the vicinity of Nowa Radomsk are for the control of the second railroad line leading to Warsaw.

COUNTER OFFENSIVE BY GERMANS IN THE WEST CHECKED BY BRITISH

London, Dec. 8.—The development of severe fighting marked by daring dashes of the British and French for the possession of the road leading from Roulers, through Menin and on to Lille, Lens and Arras is indicated to-day in reports from the battlefront.

A counter offensive launched by the Germans in the Ypres and Yser regions has been safely checked while British by a dash along the railway captured Passchendaele, making an advance of 2½ miles and taking up a position within five miles of Roulers. From Passchendaele the British are in a position to execute a flank attack upon Menin, while another assault is being made on Roulers.

The capture of Vermelles by the French, first admitted by the Germans, and officially announced by the French War Office today, is part of a movement toward the taking of that important roadway. The French fought for nearly two months before gaining possession of Vermelles, after it was taken by the Germans on Oct. 16. Vermelles is five miles from Lens, one of the key points upon the road which the allies seek to control. Menin, toward which the British attack may now be directed, is midway between Roulers and Lille.

GERMANY DESIRES THAT HOSTILITIES AGAINST HER IN SOUTH AFRICA CEASE

Berlin, Dec. 8, by wireless to London.—Dr. Solfs, the Secretary of Colonies, states that the German government does not intend to permanently occupy the South African Union. Germany desires, he says, that the hostilities which were forced upon her by the South African Union shall cease. Dr. Solfs further declares that if the Union government abstains from further hostilities against German territory, and if the territory which has been invaded is evacuated so that the South Africans may establish a neutral state, Germany would officially recognize this condition, and would respect territorial integrity and the political importance of the neutral state. This it the first official intimation from the German government that they fomented the South African rebellion.

DISCOLORED, WRINKLED SKIN EASILY REMOVED

Since brown or yellow, over-red or blotchy complexions are decidedly not the fashion I cannot see why so many continue to wear them. Surely every woman has heard of mercolized wax. This I know—from my own and others experiences—will positively banish every unsightly tint. The wax really takes off a bad complexion. It gradually, harmlessly absorbs the thin layer of surface skin with all its defects, as chaps, liver spots, pimples, freckles, blackheads. Just as gradually the discarded skin is replaced by the clear, white youthful skin underneath. Mercolized wax, procurable at any drug store, is applied nightly like cold cream and removed in morning with warm water. [illegible]

I can't understand, either, why ladies will be bothered with wrinkles, since the famous [illegible] has been public property. Germans are Showing Activity Along the Yser and Near Ypres

Paris, Dec. 8.—(Noon).—Greater activity on the part of the Germans in the region of Ypres and along the Yser is reported in the official communique issued by the war office today. With this indication of the German's meeting the allies' attempt to advance their lines with a counter offensive, the fighting in Flanders may be expected again to assume the desperate character which marked the early stages of the battle.

"The enemy became more active in the regions of Ypres and the Yser," the communique states, "the French artillery replying successfully to all the attacks. The operations in the Aisne and Champagne regions are marked chiefly by artillery duels. The French troops have gained some ground in the Argonne region."

The capture of Vermelles is again announced in today's communique with the explanation that it had been the scene of a fierce struggle for two months, and "was taken by a brilliant attack." The statement says, "Since October 25 we have advanced slowly by sapping and mining operations, and carried the park and chateau on December 1st." Some ground has been gained northwest of Pont-an-Mousson, the statement declares; this is north of Metz.

The British troops have captured Passchendaele, on the railway between Ypres and Roulers. This represents another advance of the allied lines and the opening of the way for a flank movement upon Menin, along the Lys.

The British advanced about 2 and one half miles by taking Passchendaele, and are now in a position to continue their movement along the railway towards Roulers.

London, Dec. 8.—An additional report from the Belgian Atrocity Commission today, replies to the protest arising from accusations directed against the Germans, by twenty-two German universities and made to the foreign educational institutions. The reply quotes various official proclamations and orders issued by Generals Von Emmich, General Von Buelow, General Von Der Glotz, and others, which it declares, authorize and admit wholesale reprisals upon the inhabitants.

The Commission declares: "Those odious acts committed everywhere show the application of a preconceived system, putting into practice instructions which made the enemy operating in Belgium a horde of Barbarians and a band of incendiaries."

PETERBOROEGH PATRIOTIC FUND IS ENTHUSIASTICALLY SUSTAINED

Last night the Grand Opera House was crowded to its fullest capacity. The first part of the program was a series of songs by the Burns sisters, who are guests at the Grand Hotel, and in vaudeville at the Grand Opera House. The singers were loudly and well deservedly applauded. When the Burns' sisters rendered "Its a Long Way to Tipperary" the house went almost crazy with enthusiasm.

HON. W. T. WHITE.

The Hon. Minister of Finance, on rising, was fittingly introduced by Mayor Buller. He noted that the Ministers of the Crown at Ottawa, since the outbreak of the war have been overcrowded with work.

Speaking of Peterboro' the Minister of Finance said that the duties of a Minister were at all times onerous. Since the outbreak of the war they had been arduous and exacting in the extreme. The hours of day and night had been filled with the consideration of matters of the gravest importance and responsibility. The large gathering at Peterborough was a proof of the intense patriotic interest which its citizens had in the appalling struggle in which the Empire is now engaged not only for its own preservation but literally and truly for the cause of human freedom throughout the world. It is the most inappreciably wicked war of the ages and the question arose at the beginning and has been canvassed to the uttermost. Who is responsible for all this out-pouring of blood? There is encouragement to humanity in this because it shows that nations do recognize the existence of an international conscience. The causes leading to the war are now for the historian. The immediate duty is to fight not to theorize. Two things however are plain. Great Britain strove to avert the war. Germany had the power to avert the war but declined to exercise it. Had Germany raised her hand in protest to Austria there would have been no war. Germany wanted war. She was prepared. The German people had been taught to believe in their invincibility. Prussian militarism had obtained their toleration of autocratic government and the crushing burden of armaments. If any doubted as to the intentions of Germany, why all her detestable espionage system? Why the fleet of Zeppelins now announced as the agency of attack upon London? The clear fact is that Germany had long meditated war. The essential principle of German strategy is force and action. Their plan was to hold Russia by a containing force, to hurl their legions irresistibly through Belgium upon the unprepared forces of France. Should the contemptible (?) little British army appear they would drive it into the sea. With France prostrate they would turn their attention to Russia and similarly overwhelm her. Their calculations have signally failed. In outraged Belgium they encountered the most heroic resistance of modern times. Today they are on the defensive on the west. Our Canadian troops will probably be in the decisive engagements of the war. The forcing back of Germany's legions from West and East beyond her own frontiers is slow, bloody and costly. She was almost self-sustaining. The pride of her ruling classes with the military power in their own hands would not yield until driven to the last extremity. Revolution might hasten the event or the intrusion of other factors which cannot be foreseen. The British system encourages the development of individuality among citizens and of nationality among states. The German system would obliterate both individuality and nationality. There should be no peace unless signed at Berlin and upon terms that civilization for a few generations at least will go forward untroubled by despotic ambition and unhampered by the intolerable oppression of armaments.

The Minister said that the National Patriotic Fund was designed to take care of the wives, families and dependents of those Canadian citizens on active service. From all parts of Canada the response had been most prompt and gratifying. Every citizen should do what he could during war time. Those who cannot inlist can give. The establishment of the Patriotic Fund has made it easier for those who are fighting for us at the front. It allays their anxiety as to those left behind. Let us see that there is a roof over the head of their little ones and bread upon the table. No citizen of Canada can give to a nobler cause. What worthier gift than that which goes to comfort and assist the dependents of those who have freely offered to undergo hardships, privation, wounds and even death in the service of their country.

Mr. Ed. Harrihan gave a song of loyalty that was loudly applauded. The big audience demanded an encore.

Rev. Father Minehan of Toronto, next spoke, giving a [illegible]. He referred to Peterborough's enterprise and said Peterborough's prosperity was phenomenal. He said, in his remarks, incidentally, that Belgium is covered with an imperishable halo. He made a passionate appeal for funds for the Patriotic Fund.

Other speakers followed, whose speeches will be given in tomorrow's issue.

Features of the Campaign Which Will be Outlined in Detail in a Few Days--Red Cross Bandaging Exhibit in Preparation--Peterborough Club Donates $500 to the Fund and Other Similar Subscriptions are Coming

A feature of the publicity end of the patriotic campaign will be the Red Cross bandaging exhibit which will be put on during the afternoons of the days of the campaign. Mr. Might, of Turnbull's, has given the use of the north window for the three days of the campaign. In the window will be presented the operations of bandaging and caring for wounded men.

Four of the young lady nurses from the hospital will assist and four of the Cadets from the Collegiate will be the wounded. The whole scene will be highly realistic.

It is intended to put on the demonstration in the afternoon from 3 to 5, and in the evening from 7.30 to 8.30. Should there be only one demonstration given it will be at from 4 to 6 p.m. The young ladies assisting have duties at the hospitals, and the demonstrations will have to suit their convenience.

Dr. Cameron has the display in hand, and it promises to be a good and telling feature.

Four of the Cadets who have been selected report for instructions tonight, and promise to be as decorous as possible, and try and look as suffering from serious wounds and generally broken up.

Peterborough Club Gift

The committee are heartened by the fine subscription from the Peterboro' Club. This is not the only amount of $500 that is coming. There are others. At least five lots of this amount are expected. Will you be one?

Lantern Slide Display.

Tonight will be the lantern slide display. It will be put on from the committee rooms, the pictures being thrown from the window above. The sheet will be stretched on the east side of George Street, and it is expected that a fair view can be had from the corner of Brock Street. The slides include a series kindly loaned by Mr. F.F. Matthews of the Valcartier Camp and from Mr. Keyes, many of the British dreadnoughts and war ships. The committee are also securing a fine assortment of scenes in the Belgain battlefields and the operations of the Allies. A further assortment of the Valcartier Camp and a number of slides of local men identified with the movement. In addition some special slides of the 57th Contingent at Salisbury Camp and a group of an officer who has gone and the kids that are left behind are being prepared. The whole display will be well worth seeing.

Thursday night, another parade of the Home Guard. These men are fine, and having a fine assortment, it is no trouble to show goods. While we all hope they will never be called on to fight, it is a mighty good thing to be ready. The bands will accompany each parade.

WOUNDED BELGIANS ARE ALL ANXIOUS TO MEET GERMANS AGAIN

Toronto, Dec. 8.—"In all our cases so far we have just had three Englishmen and all the rest are Belgians," writes Miss G. Mitchell, a Toronto nurse, who is at present in the Canadian hospital at Folkestone in Kent. "The Belgians are wonderful. They are so patient and gentle, and say 'Merci, beaucoup' for everything we do for them. They brought a boy of seventeen in last week, and as they carried him in with his eyes closed he looked just like a baby. He was such a dear little fellow. We got the bullet out, and now he is getting better and wants to go back to fight again.

"The only time the Belgians grow bitter is when they talk of the Germans and the terrible things they have done to their women and children. Then their faces grow savage. Some of the true stories they tell us are fearful, and somethings will happen when they meet those fiends again. I should like to be there. None of the Belgians speak English, so the nurses are polishing up their French.

"The work is tremendous. We often have as many as forty emergency cases all at once, and I spent all yesterday in the operating room. We are so tired at night that we just lie down with our clothes on. The officers and men brought in are so dazed that they say they hear the noise of the shells in their ears for several days after leaving the battlefield. They are all suffering from nervous shock. On a clear, quiet day here we can hear the boom of the guns, and it is quite an easy thing to see France across the Channel.

"The Duchess of Albany visited us yesterday, and the Queen has sent her lady in-waiting down. She is so pleased with the work the Canadian girls are doing that she is preparing little medals for them to wear to commemorate her visit. It is possible that we will be sent to the front soon, but nothing definite has been heard. You will have been told, of course, that the wounds of the men are terrible."

VARIATIONS IN MILK FAT

They Show That Cows Should be Tested at Frequent Intervals

Frequent experiments have shown that one single test of a cow's milk is not reliable as an indication of what percentage of fat her milk normally contains. A great many well known causes affect the test, also some causes that are unknown at present even by the closest students. This "variation in the test" is one of the puzzles of the cow's individuality, and because of these puzzling variations it is advisable to take composite samples at intervals so as to ascertain the average test.

Some painstaking investigations at one of the dairy research stations in England, with seven cows for two days, even covering such details as a separate test of eleven successive pints, three times a day, from the four quarters of the udder, show that while thirty pounds of milk per day was 3.6 per cent., the variation was all the way from only [illegible] of one per cent. up to nine and a half per cent. of fat.

This is clear proof of how misleading one single test may be. If the real earning capacity of each individual cow is to be computed, it must be on the basis of her annual production of milk and fat less the cost of feed; regular weighing and testing give that knowledge which every factory patron should have of each cow he keeps.

The Sheep Pays

Money invested in sheep will nearly double itself in one year, since the fleece will pay for the feed and care of the sheep, and the lambs, often two per ewe, are the profit. It is estimated that ten sheep may be kept where one cow may, and the risk is much less. It may be said that the sheep always carries her pocketbook with her. If she dies, her pelt or fleece pays her funeral expenses. If she lives, her wool in the spring and her lambs in the fall pay double revenue. No other stock pays as large a percentage of clear profit on the money invested. Nothing else will build up a rundown farm as quickly as a flock of sheep. While pasturing, the sheep's manure is distributed about so evenly that no manure spreader could equal the sheep in its work.

Poultry Industry

The value of the poultry industry in New Zealand was stated at a conference of poultrymen to be two millions sterling per annum, this sum changing hands for products, produce and materials in order to keep the industry going. The average price of eggs and table poultry was fully 50 per cent. higher than it was ten years ago. Five years ago they could count on one hand the number of persons engaged in poultry farming for a living. Now they could be numbered by the score. Farmers too, were giving poultry their attention, since they were realizing that the high prices received for eggs and table birds made the keeping of poultry a valuable adjunct to farm pursuits.

MOTHERS OF GREAT MEN

The Influence of the Parents Means Much to the Child

"No clever man ever had a fool for a mother," said the Sage of Chelsea in his own particular dogmatic way, and it could probably be asserted with equal truth, since generalizations, like rulers, are allowed to have exceptions, that no really great man ever had a weakling for a mother.

Certain it is that in the biographies and autobiographies of the giants of their day and generation, and of the giants of the ages, whether soldiers or statesmen, churchmen or poets, or whatever their powers made them, some of the most interesting pages are those in which their mothers appear, the source and inspiration of their sons' future greatness.

Kiosk-Hydro Will Give English Seaside Resorters Opportunity For Study

"Come down and see the fish," may be a greeting at some seaside resorts. Several English watering-places are negotiating for the installation of the kiosk-hydro, a new invention, which enables sightseers to descend into the sea.

The kiosk-hydro, which is the invention of an Italian engineer, consists of a circular steel observation chamber, in the walls of which are double watertight windows. Above these windows are electric lamps of 10,000 candle-power fitted with reflectors, and capable, it is claimed, of projecting light a distance of 1,500 feet when the water is clear.

The chamber has a sloping roof, which narrows into a steel tube, through which two staircases, one for descent and the other for ascent, lead to the water level. The upper part of the kiosk-hydro may either take the form of a floating kiosk, rising and falling with the tide, and connected with a pier by a gangway, or it may be part of the pier itself, with the observation chamber suspended just above the bed of the sea.

Glass half an inch thick is used for the windows, and the steel shell is of the same thickness.

A LUCKY PRISONER

Mr. F. C. Philips, who in his time has played many parts—those of soldier, theatrical manager, barrister, and journalist among them—tells many anecdotes in his book of interesting reminiscences. A number of the stories are concerned with the Bar. Mr. Baron Martin at the Guildford Assizes was trying a man for murder, and he summed up to the jury dead against the prisoner.

The jury, however, took a merciful view of the case and returned a verdict of manslaughter. Baron Martin was always very brief in his sentences, and never attempted to harrow a prisoner's feelings. "Prisoner at the Bar," said the old Scotsman, "you're the luckiest man I ever came across. Tak' penal servitude for life."

Another story relates to Maule when presiding at the same Assizes. During the progress of one case the counsel for the Crown put a little girl, who was five or six years old, into the witness box. Counsel for the defence objected to the child being sworn, saying that it was impossible she could understand the nature of an oath.

"There may be something in what you say," remarked Maule. "Come up, my dear, and sit by me." The child was lifted up to the Bench.

"Now, my child, you are going to be asked some questions."

"Yes, sir."

"Now, supposing you were a naughty little girl and told stories, do you know where you would go to?"

"No, sir," answered the child.

"Neither do I," said Maule; "an excellent answer. Swear the witness."

Robert McLean, engineer, Troon, was drowned in Ayr Harbor. Two seamen from an Admiralty survey yacht heard cries for help, and one of them, Thomas Blay, dived into the harbor and reached the side of the struggling man just as he sank. The seaman dived for him and brought him to the surface, but he was dead.

VARIATIONS IN MILK FAT

They Show That Cows Should be Tested at Frequent Intervals

Frequent experiments have shown that one single test of a cow's milk is not reliable as an indication of what percentage of fat her milk normally contains. A great many well known causes affect the test, also some causes that are unknown at present even by the closest students. This "variation in the test" is one of the puzzles of the cow's individuality, and because of these puzzling variations it is advisable to take composite samples at intervals so as to ascertain the average test.

Some painstaking investigations at one of the dairy research stations in England, with seven cows for two days, even covering such details as a separate test of eleven successive pints, three times a day, from the four quarters of the udder, show that while thirty pounds of milk per day was 3.6 per cent., the variation was all the way from only six-tenths of one per cent. up to nine and a half per cent. of fat.

This is clear proof of how misleading one single test may be. If the real earning capacity of each individual cow is to be computed, it must be on the basis of her annual production of milk and fat less the cost of food; regular weighing and testing give that knowledge which every factory patron should have of each cow he keeps.

The skins of 100,000 animals are used every year for the covers of Oxford Bibles alone, and 400,000 sheets of gold are required for the gilt lettering.

The Sheep Pays

Money invested in sheep will nearly double itself in one year, since the fleece will pay for the feed and care of the sheep, and the lambs, often two per ewe, are the profit. It is estimated that ten sheep may be kept where one cow may, and the risk is much less. It may be said that the sheep always carries her pocketbook with her. If she dies, her pelt or fleece pays her funeral expenses. If she lives, her wool in the spring and her lambs in the fall pay double revenue. No other stock pays as large a percentage of clear profit on the money invested. Nothing else will build up a rundown farm so quickly as a flock of sheep. While pasturing, the sheep's manure is distributed about so evenly that no manure spreader could equal the sheep in its work.

Poultry Industry

The value of the poultry industry to New Zealand was stated at a conference of poultrymen to be two millions sterling per annum, this sum changing hands for products, produce and materials in order to keep the industry going. The average price of eggs and table poultry was fully 50 per cent. higher than it was ten years ago. Five years ago they could count on one hand the number of persons engaged in poultry farming for a living. Now they could be numbered by the score. Farmers too, were giving poultry their attention, since they were realizing that the high prices realized for eggs and table birds made the keeping of poultry a valuable adjunct to farm pursuits.

MOTHERS OF GREAT MEN

The Influence of the Parents Means Much to the Child

"No clever man ever had a fool for a mother," said the Sage of Chelsea in his own particular dogmatic way, and it could probably be asserted with equal truth, since generalizations, like rulers, are allowed to have exceptions, that no really great man ever had a weakling for a mother.

Certain it is that in the biographies and autobiographies of the giants of their day and generation, and of the giants of the ages, whether soldiers or statesmen, churchmen or poets, or whatever their powers made them, some of the most interesting pages are those in which their mothers appear, the source and inspiration of their sons' future greatness.

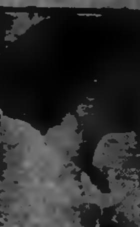
Hints on Beauty Culture

Your Cold Bath a Tonic If You Breathe Deeply

By MAGGIE TEYTE

Prima Donna Chicago-Philadelphia Opera Company.



MAGGIE TEYTE

I AM constantly in receipt of letters which ask advice about various ailments, and request the recommendation of some internal remedy. I cannot give any such information.

To begin with, I am not capable. I am not a physician. Then I am not willing to give even so-called harmless remedies for an ailment of which I know nothing. If any of my correspondents are ill, I wish, without delay, they would seek aid from the proper channels. And they have my best wishes at all times, my kindly thoughts, and the hope of a speedy delivery from all their ills.

All I can do is to help to make life a little more pleasant by giving a few hints on making the most of ourselves. I am always glad to reply to any question which I am able to answer. Any letters sent to me in care of this paper will be forwarded to me.

One of the questions asked me so many times concerns the relative value of the hot and the cold bath.

I do not consider them interchangeable. They each have a different mission. The work of the hot bath is primarily cleansing. The work of the cold bath is fortifying. The hot bath rests and relaxes the system. The cold bath awakens it.

Not all of us can take cold baths. The one sure test is whether having tried them one experiences the reaction and exhilaration which should result from any tonic. If, instead, the body becomes chilled, and one is a long time getting the blood to circulate freely enough to feel the glow that should follow the cold dash and vigorous rubbing, then the cold bath has no place in the curriculum.

At best it should not be more than a sponge in cold water, or a shower, and be followed by deep breathing exercises and a brisk rub-down with a crash towel or bath mitt.

The hot bath opens the pores of the skin, induces perspiration, and allows the effete matter to be removed. There should always be a rinsing with cooler water and a rub with some tonic, such as alcohol and camphor.

For the face I believe in the medium heat. And there should be massage afterward with a lump of ice for five minutes in order to tighten the skin and close the pores.

The blackheads, which so many complain of, are really minute particles of dirt which have lodged in the pores and hardened. The surest and most practical way to remove them is with soap and water.

We would all dislike to meet the man who bluntly advised a woman seeking a cure for a face full of skin imperfections to "Wash it, madam." Yet such advice, sensibly followed, would often cure. The famous beauty specialists, to whose wisdom some of the most noted French women owe their good looks, say the American woman uses too much hot, soapy water for her ablutions. He advocates warm water with salt or some herb, such as dried rosemary.

After such a bath he advocates the cold spray and then the use of a stiff flesh brush to restore circulation.

For one who is tired this specialist says there is no better treatment than the warm salt bath, which will restore vitality as much as a nap. He limits the time of remaining in the water to half an hour, and fixes 15 minutes as the time for the average bath.

One of the oldest and best tonic baths may be had in the spring by using wild rosemary [illegible] in the tub.

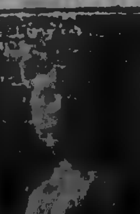
Kitchen Experiments

XXXVI.



LOONA DALRYMPLE

"WHY don't you make some chicken soup, Mary?" I suggested one night at dinner. "I'm mighty fond of it."

"I don't know how," confessed Mary.

"What about a cook book?" I suggested mildly.

"I'm scared to death of cook books ever since I thought it said a half a peck of potatoes to thicken the cream instead of half a package. And Peter, aren't grocers stupid? Yesterday I ordered a pound of bay leaves and the grocer brought me a great big flour bag jammed full. How was I to know they weigh so little? And why didn't he tell me and just bring a few?"

"Probably," I suggested, "like the man who went on leaving milk while we were away, he had a sense of humor."

"Do you suppose they buy them by the dozen leaves?" ventured Mary.

I did not smile.

"Probably by the ounce," I suggested. "Why don't you call mother up and ask her how to make the soup?"

"I—I don't want to," admitted Mary. "It looks so stupid, and I know your mother thinks I ought to know all these things like—like the old-fashioned women. I'll try it tomorrow night, Peter. I'll give you a cook book to look over, and if there's anything very wrong with the recipe, according to the way you remember it, you can tell me and we'll let it go at that."

Mary tried the chicken soup the following night. Mary, bless her heart, is always willing to try anything to please, though things rarely come out as she plans. The soup was one of them.

"The soup's on, Peter," said Mary, "and it's acting very strangely. You see the book didn't say just how much rice, and I've put in a great deal—several pounds it seems to me—but you'd hardly know it was in there."

"Rice swells alarmingly," I suggested uneasily.

We glanced in the pot. The soup smelled delicious, and there seemed no undue quantity of rice. A little later things began to happen. Mary summoned me with a squeal of alarm.

"Oh, Peter!" she exclaimed in considerable alarm, "do come look at the soup."

I glanced in the pot.

"That," said I, with decision, "is no longer soup. It's porridge."

"What in the world has happened to it?" wailed Mary.

"The rice," I suggested, "has swelled—alarmingly indeed. Get a dipper and a big bowl."

Mary obeyed.

We ladled forth an enormous quantity of rice and let the soup come to a boil again. It thickened miraculously in no time. We ladled forth some more rice.

"How much do you think you put in, Mary?" I inquired. "Something like four pounds, you said?"

"Maybe a little more," admitted Mary. "I put in all I had. It—it didn't seem much—"

"It is now," I said grimly. "Mary, get everything portable and empty you have, and we'll ladle rice until we begin to see soup again."

We ladled everything full and still the proportion of rice to soup was startling. I looked at Mary, saw her lips quiver ominously, and I burst suddenly into an irresistible roar of laughter.

"Come on, sweetheart!" I exclaimed. "Don't cry. It's merely funny. After this we'll swallow foolish pride and ask mother."

Pride surely goeth before a fall.

THAT BARBARIC IMPULSE :: :: By Michelson

IF THESE were the days of the cave man—the days when lovers went wooing with a club—how different everything would be! Sounds like a cruel affair to say that the lover of those days smote her a tidy whack over the head, then carted her off. But it was good form in the stone age, and even SHE took it for granted.

Sometimes the modern man hears the barbaric song. Something in his blood that has come down from the stone age makes him wish that the splendid simplicity of the old method were in operation today. When obstacles, when modern restraints interfere, when salaries become an issue, the voice of the barbarous past sometimes shouts in his ears and he wishes he could simply gather her up and RUN OFF with her.

No, he doesn't want to use a club (except the kind you hide in with other congenial barbarians). He just wants to TAKE her, to stop having the faint heart that DIDN'T win the fair lady—to stop all indecision, brush aside all obstacles to the "happily ever after" by plain CAPTURE. Then away to Paradise over the roof of the world.

Advice to Girls

By ANNIE LAURIE

Tango is only a romp, but girls like "Distressed," whose "Life is spoiled without it," should obey their mothers.

Dear Annie Laurie:

My mother says that any one who dances the tango ought to be ashamed.

She lets me waltz and two-step all right; but she's been somewhere and heard some creature talk about the tango, and so she thinks it's awfully wicked.

Nobody does anything but the tango now and I am absolutely out of it, for mamma won't let me go anywhere where they tango.

Do you think I ought to stand it? Isn't there some way that I can show her how unreasonable she is, or must I just sit down and have my whole life spoiled by her prejudice?

DISTRESSED.

YOUR mother thinks she knows what she's talking about, but I don't believe she does.

However, that's no reason for you to leave your happy home, like the girl in the song, and it's no excuse whatsoever for you to dislike your mother or treat her with anything but love and respect.

She has just as much right to her opinions as you have to yours, and, between you and me, she has a good deal more right to hers.

She's older and more experienced, and, no matter what you think or don't think, experience does count.

You'll find that out some day; and then who's paying your bills?

Who bought you that pretty hat you're wearing; who surprised you with a new set of bedroom furniture for your birthday?

Who loves all those who love you, just because they love you, and who hates with a bitter hatred all those who act as if they didn't think you were a white-robed seraph straight from the heavenly kingdom?

No, she doesn't have to do all of these things at all. Nobody else does them, either because she has to or doesn't have to.

You wouldn't give up any friend in the world who did for you one-half of what your mother does, even if that friend thought that it was a deadly sin to do your hair in anything but a doorknob—would you?

Why can't you be grateful to your mother, as grateful as you would be to any one else who was half as good to you as she is?

Is the fact that she is your mother the one thing that you can't stand? What if she is old-fashioned in her ideas; you'll be likely to be old-fashioned yourself when you get to her age.

She is old-fashioned—there's no doubt of that—but that's a crime that she shares with thousands of other people.

Did you ever read anything of Byron's? He's old-fashioned, too.

Girls weren't allowed to read him in your mother's day, but poor old Byron is a Sunday school tract compared to the things you girls all read and discuss, mark you, at this day and date.

He was the foremost libertine of Europe, but he simply couldn't stand the idea of the waltz.

He wrote poetry about it and said in effect that no girl could possibly waltz—and be decent.

A waltz is just twice as dangerous as any tango ever dared to be.

The tango isn't a dance at all—it's a romp—and it takes a romping hoyden to dance it, and it isn't the romping hoyden who elopes with the chauffeur. It's the modest little girl who can't speak above a whisper—to any one but the chauffeur.

You might as well call a blowy game of tennis a lure of Satan as to inveigh against the immorality of the tango.

All this I believe firmly and truly, but I don't see any reason why you should commit suicide because your mother doesn't think as I do.

Your whole life won't be spoiled by the fact that you either tango or do not tango.

Don't be such a crank about it. Stop talking about it and thinking about it for a while, and the first thing you know your mother will forget all about her prejudice.

It worries her to see you so perfectly carried away with the idea.

Drop it, and she'll drop her opposition.

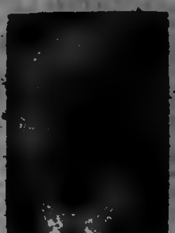
Secrets of Health and Happiness

Those Who Are Over-Fat Must Form New Habits

By Dr. LEONARD KEENE HIRSHBERG

A. B., M. A., M. D. (Johns Hopkins).

Copyright, 1914, by L. K. Hirshberg.



DR. HIRSHBERG

CAESAR said that men of the Cassius type of gauntness are restless kickers who would unthrone the gods themselves, and that the rotund, buxom fellows, "sleek headed men and such as sleep o' nights," are safe, sane and satisfied.

Caesar here states a hygienic truth beyond both his rhetoric, his strategy and his philosophy. Those who lose sleep wane and become like the pale, new moon. Those who sleep "o' nights" wax elfful.

"Jack Spratt can eat no fat, his wife can eat no lean;" thus betwixt the twain they keep their checkbook clean.

This old nursery rhyme brought up to the instant is as false as all true proverbs must be. When a fat person abides with a thin one, particularly when they inhabit close quarters in an apartment house, the buxom one grows fatter and the lean and usually far from hungry, narrow one approaches the shadow of infinity.

Married couples should not "dwell together" in this sense. That is to say, even individual beds are but sorry aids to restore the flesh-balance. Separate sleeping rooms, wherever possible, are the sanitary solutions of excessive avoirdupois and more skin over bones.

"What makes me so stout?" asks the fair lady, and the answer may be tabulated:

Suppers after 6 o'clock.
Midnight luncheons.
Trolley cars.
Slow walking.
Late hours.
Elevators.
Automobiles.
Matinees.
Theatres.
Eating to satiation.
Infectious diseases and an Africa jungle of omissions and analogous complexions.

Habits Must Be Changed.

The remedy rests in a recognition of these facts and then a change of habits upon the part of the globular owner of a fat and far from forty equatorial line.

This fleshy tumefaction and turgescence of the human girth can be reduced! It is not strictly a matter of diet, and it is absolutely never a question of dangerous drugs.

If you are oil-bound, let it be said, at the risk of hard feelings, you are physically on the down grade.

No one who waxes spherical or ellipsoidal can learn, do, or feel as he or she was once able. Then the fat is in the fire.

The expressions, "fair, fat and forty," "laugh and grow fat," "who is your fat friend," "nobody loves a fat man," each contain a sly dig, and but a decimated part of the truth. For to be infested with this useless avoirdupois is a vain boast of health and happiness, Shakespeare, Caesar and Falstaff to the contrary notwithstanding.

Twixt fat and isthmus there's this difference known, the thin seek others' good, the stout their own. Don't blame me for these words. A clown said them. Of course, they are in line with aristocratic views, hence far from the whole truth.

If the obese would be as thin as millenium trillionth of a gossamer thread they must change their habits. If you are cowing your equator; if there is much drooping over your bow, and you would be an isthmus with spindle-shanks, ninety and nine per cent. of your habits must be changed.

A "Bad Habit."

Briefly, fat means age more than "hardened arteries" do. A woman is as old as she is fat, and a man is a decade older. To lose this is to be rejuvenated, to be made sound in soul and body, to become a vigorous, thoughtful, bright, creative individual once again.

To be fat, it must be plain, is a bad habit. Diminutive chains of habit are seldom heavy enough to be felt until they are too strong to be broken. Small habits well pursued betimes thus reach the dignity of crimes.

Adipose thrives rapidly when the power of burning up the food is less than the quantity of victuals. Indeed, many of the various "reducing chemicals" depend upon their power of combustion to rid the fabric of fat.

This combustion and burning of eaten and imbibed pabulum is brought about by oxidation. Oxidizing food is the power that resides in your tissues only when they are fresh, rested and energetic.

Limit Is 5 P. M.

Muscular work and labor with your senses and thoughts oxidizes food. Hungry people, nervous, irritable and poor people are thin, because their oxidation processes are always greater than the amount of victuals taken.

After 5 o'clock in the afternoon all food should be taboo, unless you wish to gain weight. The flagging forces of your combustive fabric have then waned. They cannot oxidize food or drink.

Never ride in a trolley, avoid elevators; shun automobiles and taxis; run upstairs to the point of, but not with short-windedness; dance and exercise every night if possible; do not rest at all by day; retire at 11 P. M. and arise at 6:30 or so; avoid sweets, oils, fats, creams, sugars, starches and diets which are a tax upon your limited oxidizing powers. Keep in the air!

On the whole, the most important point is not to eat after the 5 o'clock tea, and never indulge yourself in the hardest of all oxidizable substances, beer, whiskey, wine or other alcoholic liquors. Change all your present habits.

Daddy's Good Night Story

By [illegible]

JACK RABBIT was peeking out of the window one Saturday morning, when he saw the Squirrel children and Billy Possum coming lippety-clip over the snow.

"Bang! Bang!" they knocked at the door.

"Come in!" said Mrs. Rabbit, and in walked the children.

"We have come to hear Billy Bunny's story," said Sammy Squirrel.

"Go right upstairs to the children's room," said Mrs. Squirrel.

They scampered upstairs as fast as they could and into the boys' room.

"We have come to hear your story," said Sammy Squirrel to Billy Bunny.

"My, but I am famous!" exclaimed Billy.

"We are all writing stories ourselves," said Billy Possum. "We want to know how you do it!"

"That is a secret," said Billy Bunny. "Great writers do not tell how they write stories. I will read you what I have written if you promise not to tell any one."

"We promise!" they all shouted at once.

"Yes," said Billy Bunny, "but you must all cross your hearts."

Billy Possum, Sammie and Sallie Squirrel stood up and solemnly crossed their hearts.

"You mustn't read your story before you send it to the Editor," said Jack Rabbit to Billy Bunny.

"I am sorry, but I guess Jack is right. Come on down stairs and we will make fudge instead and you can read my story in The Woodland News," said Billy Bunny.

"We had rather do that than hear your story anyway," said Billy Possum.

They all scampered down stairs and into the kitchen where Mrs. Rabbit let them make candy.

"I'll bet those children just came over to make candy," said Mrs. Rabbit to Brer Rabbit.

"They are a bright crowd," said Brer Rabbit, as he peeked in the kitchen [illegible]

Radium in Canada ?

The discovery of pitchblende in the Columbia River Valley, near Golden, B. C., has been announced. Radium emanations in the water of a spring in that locality indicate the presence of radioactive ore, and a deposit of radium is also thought to exist near Fort Steel, B.C. The Vancouver Chamber of Mines has proposed that a radium institute be founded in Vancouver.

Serious Business

According to dispatches from Odessa, all the Armenian clubs, churches and schools in Erzerum were demolished by a mob soon after the posting of a proclamation calling the Mohammedans to a holy war. Is this the forerunner of similar Mohammedan outbreaks in other parts of the world, especially in Egypt and India? This question is no doubt causing some uneasiness throughout the Christian world.

Many persons who are familiar with conditions in India and Egypt do not believe that the Moslems of those countries will in a considerable number respond to the call for a holy war. The prevalent expectation is that the fanatical demonstrations will be confined for the most part to Asia Minor. But even so, the diversion will probably give Great Britain, France and Russia serious trouble.

The course of the Sultan and his advisers in this matter is amazing. Whatever may happen elsewhere, Russia will now move into Asia Minor and will never move out. The fanatics at Constantinople are courting destruction. They have given Russia an excuse for war to a finish, with Turkey. Undoubtedly they are in some respects helping Germany and Austria, but this help would be counteracted if Roumania or Greece should be brought into the war on the side of Russia, France, and Great Britain.

Leniency for De Wet

The Boston Herald says:

Although General De Wet is unquestionably liable to death for treason it would be a mistake to make a martyr of him by inflicting the penalty. He is but a learner in some things and he is being taught. No doubt he has already learned that old back-veldt ways are out of fashion, that the law will not give way before a man who would be a law to himself, that horses cannot provide escape from motor cars, that a leader who makes peace and promises loyalty is expected to keep his word, and that the Union of South Africa is firmly founded in the popular will. It is a pity that through his constitutional chafing at authority he has brought his career in arms to a somewhat ignominious close.

De Wet is not really a malignant. It must be remembered that he never opposed the defence of British South Africa from attack by the Germans of Southwest Africa. Much less did he, like Col. Maritz and General Beyers, set out to help the Germans. His opposition, was not to defensive operations but to the decision of the Government to attack the German colony. The trouble is that his opposition took the shape of lawless force. That cannot be justified. But it may be hoped that his view is clearly understood and that the old fighter will be treated with leniency. The Government will prove itself wise if it is generous.

Rheumatism Goes Quickly Its Virus Forever Destroyed

EVERY CASE IS CURABLE.

Good-bye to Rheumatism!

Your aching joints, your stiff, sore muscles, those sleepless nights and suffering days—good-bye forever—your day is gone.

"A man met me a month ago and said, 'don't stay crippled, quit complaining, limber up.' My answer was, 'I'm rheumatic, I can't do it.' He looked me over in a pitying sort of way and told me to go to the nearest drug store for Nerviline and Ferrozone. The combination had cured him. I was convinced of his sincerity and followed his instructions. I rubbed on Nerviline three times every day—rubbed it right into my aching joints. The pain quickly lessened, and I became more limber and active. To draw the virus of the disease from my blood and I took two Ferrozone Tablets with every meal. I am well to-day, not an ache, not a pain and no sign of stiffness at all."

What Nerviline can do in a case like this it can do for you too. For nearly forty years Nerviline has been recommended for Rheumatism, Lumbago and Sciatica and Lame Back. It is the one remedy that never disappoints.

Paris, Dec. 7.—The French artillery is now outranging the German guns and proving more effective all along the line. This is indicated in the latest official statements from the War Office and is accepted to-day as an evidence that the new guns which have been expected by the French, have been brought up and are figuring extensively in the offensive movement the allies are pushing from the coast and along the entire battle line. Heavy fighting is reported in Alsace to-day. In the Argonne the German trenches are being vigorously assailed by artillery and through mining operations. INTRODUCTION

The Glenaladale Silver Black Fox Company, Limited, was incorporated in 1913 with six pairs of foxes, at 90,000. This Company re-capitalized in 1914, with 20 pairs of beautiful Silver Black Foxes, at $15,000 per pair, making a total capitalization of $300,000.

THE FOXES

Six pairs (one year old) proven breeders, and fourteen pairs (1914 pups), making a total of 20 pairs—all young foxes—good for at least 10 years. This Company has bought some of this year's options on foxes with a guarantee that they are pedigreed and of the highest strain and very best quality P. E. Island [illegible] foxes.

THE RANCH

The ranch is situated on the well known Glenaladale Farm, owned by Major C. McKinnon, formerly the homestead of Sir William McDonald, and is only 12 miles from Charlottetown, in a quiet locality sufficiently removed from any disturbance.

THE RANCHER

Mr. Arthur W. McKinnon, our Ranch Manager, has had much experience in breeding foxes, and has the practical knowledge necessary to efficiently manage and care for the animals.

The foxes will be ranched free of charge to the Company for the first year. This means a large saving to the shareholders, as some companies have to pay as high as 25 per cent. of the increase for ranching purposes.

The promoters of this Company are retaining $80,000 worth of stock for themselves; $20,000 worth has already been disposed of, leaving $200,000 to be offered to investors at $25.00 per share, with a guarantee that a dividend of 50 per cent. will be paid in cash in 1915, or whatever [illegible]

The Glenaladale Silver Black Fox Co., Limited, in 1913 guaranteed a dividend of 50 per cent. but are going to pay [illegible] per cent. in cash and [illegible] per cent. in stock in 1914. The Company is in good standing and to each and every investor the first of [illegible], 1914, we can say—"We have given you [illegible] per cent. more than we promised." And we feel sure that in 1915 all the shareholders in this [illegible] company will be able to say they received more than they were promised.

This Company can truthfully say that they have not one cent of watered stock in the Company. Now Mr. Investor, if you were a Company and we the shareholders, we would look to you for justice to give us all that you honestly can. We would not like for you to buy 2 pairs of foxes at $15,000 per pair ([illegible]) and form a fox company and capitalize your company at [illegible] and make us pay [illegible]. The Glenaladale Silver Black Fox Company, Limited, will ask you to do nothing like that. We want to let you in on the ground floor.

NOTICE

When a fox company guarantees any specified dividend to its shareholders, and when said company is an incorporated body, you need not be afraid of any unfair play, for such company is compelled to pay what they promise, and, besides, every interest is taken for the welfare of both the investor and the company.

The promoters of this Company are all above board and will not permit any crook to come in and do anything that is not right. Anyone holding stock in this Company who is dissatisfied can, by notifying the Secretary-Treasurer, have his or her money promptly refunded.

FORTUNES IN FOXES

There is money in fox ranching more than anything else ever known. It is good for the rich man and good for the poor man. A poor man cannot buy a pair of Silver Black Foxes but he can easily raise $25.00, $50.00 or $100.00. By investing in this Company he gets back his money in at least two years and then he will have an income for life and for his children to come—and after there will be money in fox farming. One of the reasons for this is that P. E. Island has now 95 per cent. of the world's foxes in captivity. For every one pelt that can be raised there are more than 25 wealthy people waiting for it in London, Russia, France and America.

PELT VALUES

The Fox Pelts have advanced greatly in price since 1910 and you can see for yourself what money was in them then.

Below are the particulars of sale of a consignment of Silver Fox Furs, shipped from Prince Edward Island sales to London, England, and sold there in March, 1914:

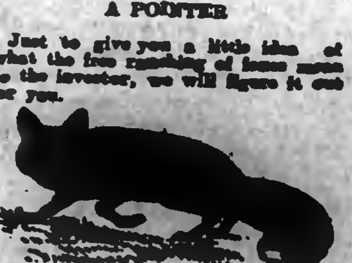
Simply fill out the application form and mail to Major C. McKinnon, Secretary-Treasurer, Glenaladale, P. I.

All cheques must be made payable to "The Glenaladale Silver Black Fox Co., Ltd."

A POINTER

Just to give you a little idea of what the free ranching of foxes means to the investor, we will figure it out for you.



We have twenty pairs of foxes in the ranch and suppose each pair produces a litter of only four pups, this is equal to 40 pairs and at $15,000 per pair it would figure out at $600,000. Now, if we had to pay even 15 per cent. of the increase for ranching purposes (which is considerably lower than some companies pay) it would mean that we would have to pay $90,000 for ranching expenses.

We ranch the foxes free for the first year, so that in addition to a guaranteed dividend of 50 per cent., we save you this large outlay of money. While we guarantee 50 per cent., should each pair in our ranch produce four pups it would mean that your dividend would be about 200 per cent. instead of 50 per cent.

FINAL WORD

A great deal has been written about Ranches, Grades of Foxes, etc., but after all the one object that every investor should keep before him is the dividend he is going to get. We have tried to show you in plain English what we can do for you and now that you have our proposition, compare it with the offer made by any other company now in [illegible] and judge for yourself [illegible] to have been [illegible] by some of the Charlottetown newspapers.

PATRIOTIC WAR RELIEF FUND

Help to Roll Up The Magnificent Total Of $50,000.00

We can and will do it, if you will help.

It is the Greatest Opportunity of Your Life.

A Special Appeal to Fraternal Organizations

YOU ARE MANY and you have many creeds, but there is at least one creed which you possess in common—the creed of standing for the right thing in the community.

We call upon the Fraternal Orders of Peterborough, one and all, for their earnest support of the War Relief Fund—for definite action as organizations.

In all the splendid record of your past, handed down through the ages as a precious heritage, is there one brighter gem of sacrifice and service than the gem you now have the privilege of encrusting upon that record!

To-day's opportunity to stand shoulder to shoulder with all society in safeguarding our soldiers' dependent women and children, will be looked back upon by your orders through all time as a priceless privilege.

GIVE! GIVE! GIVE! $50,000 OR MORE

We urge generous and immediate action by every organization of men and women who have funds available or who will solicit contributions to this cause.

AND TO EVERY INDIVIDUAL IN PETERBORO'

No matter what you feel able to give—be it a dollar or a dime—send it or bring it to the fund. We will need for this war relief work every penny we can get. The power of the moderate and small contributions is enormous in the aggregate, and every one swells the total.

Officers, Peterborough Patriotic Committee

Organization Committee—D. O'Connell, John Crane, F. D. Kerr, J. A. Aylmer, A. W. Crossman.

General Committee—Chairman, Mayor W. Buller; Vice-Chairman D. O'Connell; Chairman of Finance Committee, T. F. Matthews; Chairman List Committee, J. A. Aylmer; Chairman Publicity Committee, F. H. Dobbin; Joint Secretaries, S. R. Armstrong and F. D. Kerr; Treasurer, F. Adams.

Team Captains—E. A. Peck, G. A. Gillespie, J. J. Turner, Jr.; W. H. Dunford, Jos. Picard, Jr.; Walter Stocker, J. J. Duffus, Adjt. McIlhenney, H. S. Walker, W. J. Oke, Geo. H. Giroux.

THE LOCAL OR CONTINGENT RELIEF SIDE OF THE PETERBORO' PATRIOTIC FUND is for the purpose of Aiding Families who may be in need owing to the war, through lack of work. There are many such and will be more. They must be judiciously aided and not want.

The Idea of the Canadian Patriotic Fund is This:

THE soldiers have gone to fight not for their home town or any particular locality but for all Canada.

The whole of Canada should combine to take care of their families.

The Fund is One Fund and each locality is administered by the Local Branch.

In Peterborough for instance, families of the soldiers will be looked after by this local branch acting for the National Association.

All the families throughout Canada will receive aid on the same basis and none will be neglected.

This is a sensible and patriotic plan. Peterborough will fall in line. Do all you can but do it now.

FROM ROD AND CHAIN TO PROUD POSITION

Lieutenant-Governor Hendrie of Ontario Started Busy Career With Surveyor's Gang

It was no surprise to those who have watched the career of the man when Lt.-Col. John Strathearn Hendrie, C.V.O., M.P.P., was elevated to the distinction of Lieutenant-Governor of the Province of Ontario. It was one of the essential steps in the crowning of a career which gave great promise ever since the youthful days when he started out upon the earning highway of life by carrying a rod and chain for an engineer's gang on railway construction.

Of the physical type which gives evidence of latent power, of the mental capacity which has enabled him to grasp great problems in the commercial world, of the mixing type which has permitted him to gain many tokens of the popular esteem of his fellow-citizens, of the political caste which has won the silent approval of his fellows, John Strathearn Hendrie is now reaping the harvest of his earlier industry.

Still in His Prime

Colonel Hendrie is still young in years for a man who has gathered about him so many of the world's good things, his fifty-seven years sitting upon him lightly. Grizzled of hair and moustache, there is still a youthfulness about his features which bespeaks many more years of usefulness.

There is Scotch blood in his veins, both parents having emigrated from

COL. THE HON. J. S. HENDRIE

Ayrshire, and he is also of Huguenot descent. His education was received at the Hamilton public and private schools and at Upper Canada College, after which he responded to the belief that there is nothing quite so effective as a personal grounding in the practical side of a life work. He became rodman and assistant engineer on the construction of railways, working both in Canada and the United States, from which position he speedily rose until he became manager of the Hamilton Bridge Works.

Hamilton, being Col. Hendrie's home city, gave him all his honors, except the last. His business enterprises have been diversified, but it was not until he was chosen Mayor of Hamilton in 1901 that his merits as a citizen were recognized in tangible form.

Elected to the Legislature

The following year saw him in the Provincial Legislature as a follower of Sir James Whitney. Recognition from the Ontario Government came in 1905 when he was selected a Commissioner for the Hydro-Electric, and the same year saw him admitted to the Cabinet as a Minister without portfolio.

In and about the chambers of Parliament Col. Hendrie is looked upon as a silent man, somewhat indifferent, and when upon the floor of the House no one can accuse him of verbosity. One who has watched the proceedings of Parliament for years vouches for the statement that in his last four sessions he did not make a speech in the House. One might see him sauntering into the chamber hours after the deliberations began, apparently paying little attention to the progress of Parliament, sitting back in his chair and watching with the attitude of one to whom all this was an old story. But while Col. Hendrie [illegible] in silence, he [illegible]

As a Soldier

In the military world his ardor was [illegible] for years. His first [illegible] came when he linked his interests with the 4th Battery of Canadian Field Artillery, in which capacity he had risen to the rank in 1903. It is [illegible] has always been an advocate of compulsory military training. In private life a fondness for horses has been one of his features, and he has done much to promote that sport. He is a member of many clubs and also a past president of the Canadian Artillery Association, the decoration of C.V.O. coming during his command of the Canadian Artillery at Queen Victoria's Diamond Jubilee in 1897.

A REAL ESTATE YARN

Ex-Mayor Waugh of Winnipeg told a real estate yarn in a way that was as fetching as the story itself. A real estate agent, selling California city lots in the mid-West, entered a town when it appeared to be deserted. Discovering that the town was virtually paying its respects to one of its departed citizens, the agent, seeing no chance of doing business, joined himself to the company of mourners in the cemetery chapel. He entered as the clergyman was asking anyone who would like to say a word in memory of the deceased, let him now come forward. No one accepting the invitation, despite a repetition of the request, the real estate salesman rose and respectfully said: "Mr. Minister, as no one seems anxious to say a word for the deceased, and as I didn't know him when he was alive, perhaps you will permit me to tell you something about some California lots that I have to sell."

BUSINESS IN 2,000 B.C.

The Babylonians and Their Neighbors Knew of "Short Cuts"

The deciphering of the old Babylonian records of clay have revealed some very interesting facts with reference to business life two thousand years before Christ. In many cases these records relate to trade transactions, to business disputes, incident to the ordinary, every-day doings of the merchants, and to their troubles as to the title to property. There are even data to show how the Babylonians and their neighbors conducted their accounting systems. Nearly four thousand years ago these people had so far progressed in "business" that it was actually found necessary to enact special laws to deal with those who were trying the "short cuts" to wealth. The young man with "prospects," like his prototypes of to-day, was wont to utilize those prospects in negotiation with the professional money-lender. The banker of Babylon deposited regularly and issued his brick "checks" and bill of exchange, and the law intervened, as it does to-day, to uphold the rights of property. Most careful accounts of revenue and expenditure were kept. These show in many cases that investments in loans and purchases of land, as well as other profitable dealings, were a regular part of the fiscal activities.

BUILDING MATERIALS

Valuable Resources Being Gradually Opened up in Western Canada

With the exception of British Columbia there is very little building stone produced in Western Canada. This is due to two causes. First the rocks which underlie the developed portions of the Prairie Provinces are of comparatively recent age, and are, consequently, soft in character and weather rapidly; second, there are very few rock exposures in the settled portions of these provinces, except in the Rocky Mountains and the foot hills. In British Columbia there are large potential resources of building stone. They have, however, been developed only in certain localities on the Pacific Coast, and have been confined to Cretaceous sandstones and certain volcanic rocks, situated on Vancouver Island and adjacent islands. Varieties of marble are also quarried on Texada Island.

MANGELS FOR POULTRY

A Cheap Food to Grow Where There is Room

In the production of mangels as a poultry food, very small areas, or comparatively large ones, show a decided profit when given over to the culture of these beets. They have proved to be one of the best and one of the most popular of the roots used as poultry food, because of their ease of growth and of their very heavy yielding qualities. They grow to immense size, and will produce a good many tons of roots per acre on good soil, are easily stored with little expense, and are highly relished as a part of the daily ration throughout the winter months.

Once in a while we have complaints about our matches breaking in two. This is no fault of the Match, as EDDY'S MATCHES are made from specially selected straight-grained wood only. Clean pots and pans with
GOLD DUST

Germs of decay accumulate on oft-used pots and pans, and ordinary soap and water only clean off the surface.

Gold Dust does the work—and does it right. It digs deep after germs, cleans like a new whistle and leaves your pots and pans as new, as bright as the day they were new—and sanitarily safe.

Gold Dust does this work in just half the time required by soap or any other cleanser. Does it better, too.

Gold Dust cleans everything like magic.

SPORT SACRIFICED

Money the Only Consideration in Professional Baseball

Organized baseball seems to be on the verge of losing its last vestige of sport for sport's sake, according to W. J. MacBeth, a New York sporting writer. The commercial end of the enterprise overshadows all else. The magnates are out for the money and make no bones of the fact. The lust for gold is as deeply rooted in the minor leagues as in the major organizations.

The two big circuits depend upon patronage for financial gains. Because of this it is necessary for them to secure the very best talent to display before the public. Thousands upon thousands of dollars are expended every season by each club in the National and American Leagues for the sole purpose of fortifying for the future. Every club owner has several highly paid scouts beating all around the country in search of likely looking "bush" timber. Some have as many as six sleuths under salary. Besides these, there is a grand army of amateur sharps who do business on a commission basis. This policy of [illegible] is all well enough for first division aggregations [illegible] more than justifies the means. But it is a serious drain upon the pocketbook of the unfortunate holders of second division franchises.

Because of their weakness second division clubs in the major leagues call for the greatest [illegible]. This makes their lot all the more severe. [illegible] along in a sort of "dog in the manger" fashion and often corral most promising talent which they cannot possibly use, [illegible] party rival that might utilize it to the disadvantage of the strong.

GEORGE SISLER

phenomenal young pitcher of Michigan University. Joe Sugden, the Detroit scout, says of him: "He has the best curve of any left-hander I ever looked at." Few college players know how to run bases and not many slide properly. Sisler is an aggressive runner and has the hook slide down to perfection. His one fault seems to be over-anxiety to hit. He is almost as brilliant as an outfielder as in the pitcher's box where his specialty is the spit-ball.

OLD RACING TERMS

Fine Distinction Between Stake and Purse Often Overlooked

The old and well defined term "stake" receives some rough handling on the trotting turf when races are reported by art critics, golf experts, baseball writers or any person who happens to be available when the trotters come to town. Some of the trade papers of the trotting turf and even track officials themselves seem at times unable to recognize the plain distinction between a purse and a stake.

From the earliest period of racing the term stake, or sweepstakes, has always been used to designate a race for which the prize is the total amount of money contributed by the nominators, all of which belongs to the winners. This is the definition incorporated in the rules of the National Trotting Association, and the same meaning is given to the term sweepstakes in the New York Jockey Club's rules of racing. A race is still a stake when money or other prizes are added to the entrance fees or subscriptions, but is never a stake if the prize is less than the total amount paid by the nominators. In a "stake" the association promoting the race merely holds the entrance money in trust for the nominators.

A purse is a fixed sum offered by the promoter of the race, to which the nominators do not contribute. All entrance fees in such a race belong to the association, and if they amount to more than the purse, as often happens on the trotting turf, the association profits to that extent, and the purse remains the same as if there were only two or three entries.

Ever since instalment purses came into vogue on the trotting turf, there has been a tendency to call all early closing races stakes. As a matter of fact there are few—very few—stake races on the trotting turf, most of the promoters preferring to offer purses so that they need not pay out all the entrance money in case it exceeds the face of the purse. MANY HAWKS AND OWLS FRIENDS OF FARMER

Destroy Mice and Insects Wholesale and Very Seldom Make Raid on the Poultry Yard

Among all our birds there is no group which stands in need of protection as much as the hawks and owls, writes A. B. Klugh, M.A., in The Farmer's Advocate. The reason for this is because as a group they are sadly misunderstood. All hawks and owls are condemned by the farmer and the sportsman because of the harm which is done by a very few species.

Taken as a group the birds of prey perform a most necessary service for the farmer, a service which is carried on quietly and continuously, and which is never realized or appreciated until it is rendered less efficient by a diminution in the numbers of these birds. This service is the destruction of small rodents. Where the birds of prey have been very much reduced in numbers the field mice have increased to such an extent as to constitute a veritable plague. It may seem an [illegible] to many to class any hawk as an insectivorous bird, yet many species feed very largely upon insects.

If we look for a moment into the food of our common Canadian hawks and owls we shall see that most of them are among the most valuable allies which the farmer possesses.

The red-tailed hawk, a large species, common in the East, in which the tail is red above, is commonly termed "hen-hawk," but as a matter of fact it very rarely takes poultry, and by far the greater portion of its food consists of injurious animals. It also feeds extensively upon large insects, such as grasshoppers, crickets and beetles.

The red-shouldered hawk is the commonest large hawk in many parts of the East. It may be known, when at rest, by the reddish coloration of the bend of the wing, and when in the air by the underside of the tail having narrow bands of black and white. This species shares with the red-tail the name of hen-hawk, a name even less merited than in the case of the red-tail, since less than one and one-half per cent. of its food consists of poultry or game birds. Its tastes are decidedly omnivorous, and it feeds on mice, snakes, frogs, fish, grasshoppers, centipedes, spiders, crayfish, earthworms, snails, and an occasional ground-inhabiting bird.

The rough-legged Hawk, which breeds in the West and is seen as a migrant in the East, feeds almost exclusively upon field mice. It takes also ground squirrels and sometimes a rabbit, but never touches a bird either wild or domesticated. This is one of our largest hawks, being two feet in length, and may be recognized by its having the legs feathered down to the toes.

Swainson's hawk, which is the commonest large hawk of the prairies, may be known by the broad band of chestnut across the breast, which contrasts strongly with the pure white of the length. This species is about twenty inches in length. It feeds almost entirely upon field mice, gophers, and large insects.

TRAFFIC IN DRUGS

Far Too Much Cocaine Sold in Ontario—Government Inspection

The Canadian Pharmaceutical Association is on record as against the traffic in cocaine. The Registrar-General said that over two thousand ounces of cocaine were sold in Ontario alone during one year, and that was far more than is necessary for surgical use and prescriptions. He declared that too much of the habit begetting drug is being imported into this country by degraded agents, who distribute it like any other commercial commodity. "They barter them on the highway and in secret places for the sake of gain, which is a disgrace to humanity," said the speaker, who told his fellow-pharmacists that the only course of detection and imprisonment of such unscrupulous persons was by the appointment of a Dominion inspector. The cocaine laws of the Province and the Dominion were not put on the statute books any too soon. Speaking from actual experience, as inspector for the Ontario College of Pharmacy, of sales of cocaine by wholesale houses, he was of the opinion that there was far more cocaine being sold than was necessary for legitimate prescription purposes, and had the same opinion in regard to the sale of morphine and opium. Something should be done to further curtail the illegitimate sale of these [illegible] habit-forming drugs, and money should be expended by the Government toward furthering this end. He had not found it necessary to bring all cases and druggists into the public courts, but privately faced them with the charge that they were [illegible] the law. In some cases he was sorry to say such [illegible] had been denied, but when they discovered [illegible]

SMOKERS IN FACTORIES

Their Carelessness Causes Many Needless Fires

It is an open question whether the careless fool or the deliberate criminal does more damage by fire. Advantage seems to lie with the fool, because he is everywhere gladly bringing down destruction, while the fire bug must go about his deadly work stealthily, at weird hours and in awkward places.

Chief among the fools who carelessly cause fires is the smoker. His blazing match is cast down still alight. His cigarette end falls into piles of paper or shavings. The burning ashes of his trusty pipe descend gently into oil vats and barrels of gunpowder. If the fool destroyed only himself, the world could bear his actions philosophically, but he usually escapes while better men perish.

In England great wealth was accumulated by a man who was shrewd enough to locate small tobacco stores opposite factory entrances, but his fortune represented the loss of many fortunes by his brother manufacturers.

Smoking should be absolutely prohibited in or about every Canadian factory, and employees breaking this rule should be dismissed. If the rule became national, manufacturers could inform each other of these dismissals and could refuse employment to persistent offenders. If it were enforced there would be fewer fires, better work would be done, and the smoker would enjoy his weed more keenly in the evening, after a day's self-denial.—Industrial Canada.

NO SALT HORSE

It Costs Huge Sum Nowadays to Provision Ocean Liners

In these days, when the high cost of living is so much in the public mind, it is interesting to know what it costs a steamship to provide the necessities of life to the hordes of passengers who cross and recross the Atlantic. The annual statement of the North German Lloyd Company throws some interesting light on the subject.

For one year the company's bill for provisions alone was $4,[illegible], while during the same period [illegible] was paid $7,376,725 for 1,752,740 tons of coal which were shoveled into the ships' furnaces during the twelvemonth. For these two items alone—provisions and coal—the company paid the enormous sum of $12,[illegible].

The itemized provision bill showed that the butcher got $1,[illegible] for meats. This does not include fish and game; for the former the company paid an additional $[illegible], while the bill for the game amounted to $412,300, a total of $[illegible].

More potatoes were consumed during the year than any other single article, the total amount having been 27,376,373 pounds. Flour ranked [illegible] with [illegible] pounds, fresh beef third with [illegible] pounds, while the [illegible] was fourth with [illegible] pounds. The passengers consumed 7,[illegible] eggs, 4,371,000 oranges and lemons, 707,525 pounds of cheese and [illegible] pounds of salt. THE GREAT LAKES

We all know in a general way that Lake Superior is the largest and Lake Ontario the smallest of the Great Lakes, but the relative facts are scarcely known to the average person. While Lake Michigan ranks second in size, being forty-five miles shorter than Lake Superior, it is twice as deep as its greatest depth, the figures being 900 feet for Lake Superior and 1,800 feet for Lake Michigan, so that in cubical contents the latter far outreaches Superior. Lake Huron's greatest depth also is a hundred feet more than that of Lake Superior, so that the greatest is not superior to everything after all.

Lake Erie and Lake Ontario are comparatively shallow, with maximum depth of 204 feet and 412 feet, and yet we should not like to fall overboard in either of them. In width—maximum figures—Lake Superior comes first with 160 miles, Huron second with 105, Michigan third with 84, Erie fourth with 60, and Ontario last with only 53 miles of greatest breadth.

In comparison with its area, Ontario leads with a drainage of 29,760 square miles for its area of 6,700, the others being Erie, drainage, 39,680, area [illegible] square miles; Michigan, drainage, 70,000, area, 22,400 square miles; and Superior, drainage, 85,000, area, 32,000 square miles. Drop in elevation is very gradual, Lake Superior being 600 feet above sea-level, Michigan 583 feet, Huron 574 feet, Erie 564 feet, and then comes a big drop to 234 feet for Lake Ontario.

How to Grow Old

Don't smile.

Suspect everybody.

Keep your wireless station tuned to rumors, scandals, gossip or misery.

Specialize the grouch habit.

Envy your neighbor.

When you hear of another man's good fortune, feel mean about it.

When you sit down to dinner tell your wife and the children what every thing costs.

Never mind the pleasant day, hate tomorrow.

These are sure and positive rules.

BRITISH INFLUENCE IN SOUTH AFRICA

Intermarriage Lessens Hate—English Literature Over-runs the Country

Mr. B. Ryan, of East London, South Africa reports that a great deal of intermarrying is taking place between Briton and Boers, that the country is being over-run by light literature all of which is published in English and the children become absolutely English. While the Dutch do not like the other race at the present time the country is surely becoming British in spite of Boer prejudice and customs.

Mr. Ryan then explained why South Africa was bound to be British to the end. Although the Government had spent a million and a half pounds on a magnificent Parliament building at Pretoria, evidently with the object of keeping it in the old Transvaal capital, Johannesburg with her 300,000 people and the Rand with its gold production of $300,000,000 per annum, will be in connection with the British influence in Cape Colony the ever-growing predominating power in the South African Confederation.

FOREST RESERVES

Thirty-five Thousand Eight Hundred Square Miles of Reservation

Over ten thousand five hundred square miles were added recently to the existing area of Dominion Forest Reserves, making a total of over thirty-five thousand eight hundred square miles of reserved forest land in the Western Provinces under Dominion jurisdiction. Of this reserved area, three thousand seven hundred and eighty-two square miles are found in Alberta, one thousand eight hundred and seventy-two square miles in Saskatchewan and four thousand one hundred and eight square miles in Manitoba. Over two-thirds of the total area is found in Alberta, owing to the fact that practically all the eastern slope of the Rockies has been set apart as a forest reserve, not only to perpetuate the supply of timber, but to preserve and equalize the flow of the large prairie rivers which have their source in this reserved area.

These western reserves are created by the Dominion Government as cited in the Act "for the maintenance, protection and reproduction of the timber growing thereon, or which may hereafter grow thereon, for the conservation of the minerals and the protection of the animals, birds, and fish thereof, and for the maintenance of conditions favorable to a continuous water supply." To accomplish these ends the reserves must first be protected from fire, and under the direction of technical foresters and supervisors, fire-lines are being cut or ploughed, trails are being cut, telephone lines and lookout stations installed, "caches" of tools distributed in accessible places throughout the reserves, and efficient patrols established in accessible places throughout the reserves, and efficient patrols established.

Nor is the timber so protected allowed to die of old age. The foresters determine at what diameter in each section the maximum production is attained and when the trees reach this size, they are granted free or for a nominal sum to homesteaders who apply to the forest officials for cutting permits. Care is taken not to allow over-cutting, for it is the forester's aim to crop the forest repeatedly and at the same time increase its producing capacity by proper methods of management. Thus, by this policy of forest reservation, instead of denuded hillsides, drifting sand and barren rocks and muskeg, these areas will in time be covered with great tracts of forest owned by the people and supplying their wants, not only now but to all future time, when countries with less foresight will be in the throes of a timber famine.

DON'TS FOR GUN-USERS

Legislation, in some degree, may prevent a good many accidents. The remedy, however, largely lies with the individual himself, and at the risk of repeating what may seem like a list of platitudes, the following "don'ts" are set down for the consideration of sportsmen readers:

Don't point a gun at any person in fun. It is always the gun that "we did not know was loaded" that goes off. The only time to point a gun is when you intend to kill.

Don't carry a loaded gun or rifle in a buggy, automobile or any other kind of vehicle.

Don't forget to "break" your gun when standing with others or crossing a fence.

Don't drag a gun under a fence with muzzle pointed towards you.

Don't allow your boy to handle a gun without first drilling him thoroughly in the way it should be used. To allow him to pick up his knowledge in his own way is courting disaster.

Don't use a cheap gun. They are apt to explode when using heavy charges.

Don't load your gun until you actually get to business. At all other times it should be empty.

Don't get [illegible]

Don't vi[illegible] the game laws.—Rod and Gun.

HEARING IS RESTORED TO DEAF

Thousands of people suffer from catarrhal deafness or poor hearing, who having tried specialists, advertised treatments, artificial ear drums, ear phones, electric vibrators and various mechanical appliances without success have at last resigned themselves to a "world of silence" thinking that nothing can ever restore to them their normal hearing. Yet their case is not hopeless. A remarkable scientific treatment discovered a little more than a year ago in England is making people hear after years of deafness and is also unequalled for quickly stopping the distressing head noises that are so often the companions of defective hearing. This discovery is called Parmint and has attracted widespread notice throughout Europe where reports of the remarkable results it has given to deaf people have come in by the hundred.

The effect of Parmint it seems is by tonic action to produce a stimulous necessary to reduce all inflammation, swelling, enlargement or thickening of the organs of hearing and to stimulate the entire auditory tract.

Parmint is now being sold by many leading druggists in Peterborough and vicinity and a speedy trial is urged upon all who suffer from catarrhal deafness or headnoises in any degree. Ask the druggist for 1 oz. of Parmint (Double Strength) and take it home and mix with ½ pint of hot water and 4 oz of granulated sugar until dissolved. Take one tablespoonful four times a day and you should soon find a remarkable improvement in your hearing.

IMPORTANT.—In ordering Parmint always specify that you want Double Strength; your druggist has it or he can get it for you. If not, send 75c to the International Laboratories, 74 St. Antoine St., Montreal, who make a specialty of it.

PROTECTION AND FREE TRADE

Mr. Burnham, in response to questions from the members of St. Paul's Church Bible Class, replied that Protection was another name for efficiency and control. Free Trade in its legitimate acceptation was an appeal to let things alone and let them take their own course. This meant handing the world over to those who wished to prey upon it and leaving the mass of the people entirely defenceless. This was inconsistent with the protection of democracy, with the development of popular government, and the welfare of the people. However, the speaker said that as in all cases where a moral principle is not involved compromise was best—it was better to take as much Free Trade as was good, and as much Protection as was necessary and combine the two in a reasonable tariff. On the one hand it must be maintained that home labour shall not be the victim of cheap foreign labour, and on the other that the mass of the people at home shall not be the victims of those who would shelter themselves behind a high tariff but the claim made by free traders that Protection was altogether bad was a selfish and impossible one.

Lindsay is Ambitious

Lindsay Warder of Dec. 7 says: "In a capacity Major Hamilton, accompanied by Major Fee and Adtj. Crawford inspected the Exhibition Grounds of the Victoria County Agricultural Society." Lindsay expects to get the proposed Concentration Camp for the Mobilization of soldiers for this district. Our local authorities should get busy and press the advantages of our City. In Lindsay they have a rival that will brook no delay. In the first place, it is the home town of Major-General Sam Hughes, Minister of Militia. Again, the Lindsay Exhibition grounds would be an ideal spot for the housing of troops. There are at least six buildings, all electric lighted and with convenient water supply, and warm, substantial buildings at that, any one of them twice as big or more than the building (?) on our local exhibition grounds. Here we have the old Cordage Co's building which could be quickly remodelled to answer the purpose of a barracks, and an excellent parade ground. We hope the local authorities will realize their opportunity and make a strong bid to bring the camp to Peterborough.

Three German Cruisers Destroyed by British In South Atlantic Ocean—Kaiser is Ill—French Make Substantial Advances in Argonne District

KAISER WILHELM IS A SICK MAN BOTH PHYSICALLY AND MENTALLY

The Braggart Who Boasted of His Own and Germany's Nerves is a Complete Nervous Wreck--Displays Childish Violence Towards His Advisers, the Awakening to the Fact That He Neither Rules the World Nor the Peoples Thereon Destroys His Majesty's Peace of Mind

London, Dec. 9.—Emperor William is suffering from pneumonia which is combined with nervous depression due to over-exertion, according to telegraphs from Berlin, by way of Amsterdam correspondent of the Rotterdam Telegraph. The message adds that the German Emperor's doctors advised him not to return to the front. Via The Hague comes a similar message from Berlin saying: "Kaiser Wilhelm has pneumonia and is declared to be seriously ill. Following the official announcement that the Kaiser was suffering from bronchial catarrh this was the information learned today."

Kaiser Violent Towards Advisors

The message from Amsterdam says: "Kaiser Wilhelm is seriously ill. Messages received here from Berlin today state that the Kaiser is suffering from pneumonia and that his condition is aggravated by nervous depression caused by his extreme exertion in remaining with his troops in the field almost constantly since the war began.

"His Majesty is also declared to be suffering from occasional hallucinations."

"The Berlin messages declare that the Kaiser is extremely violent towards his advisers and others around him. The court physicians have advised against his return to the front.

It was stated earlier in the day the condition of His Majesty was satisfactory. It was generally understood yesterday, however, from the tone of the announcement of the Kaiser's illness, that he would not be able to return to the front for some time. He has been either on the eastern or western front with his troops almost constantly since the war began. His present illness is attributed to exposure in the winter weather which has prevailed on both fronts. The Kaiser has done practically all of his travelling by automobile, and has been accompanied by his staff physician.

In view of the collapse of his own nerves, it is interesting to note that the Kaiser referred to the nerves of Germans in general the other day as reported today in a despatch from Berlin. This was during a speech made on December 3 by Emperor William at one of the camps of Germans and Austrians, which he visited on his recent trip to the eastern front.

"Our Nerves Stronger" He Boasted

"You are fighting for a just cause, for liberty, for the right to exist as a nation, and for a future of prolonged peace," said the Emperor.

"We will continue to fight with success as heretofore. Heaven is on our side. With God we shall achieve a prolonged peace, for our nerves are stronger than those of our enemy."

The Kaiser was on the eastern front only last week. He visited the German troops in East Prussia and then the Austro-German forces on the Czestochowa front. The name of this town was later reported to have been changed to Kaiserberg by the Germans. While at Breslau the Kaiser met Archduke Karl Franz Josef, heir to the Austrian throne, Archduke Francis Frederick, inspector-general of the Austrian army, and Gen. Von Hotzendorf, Austrian chief of staff. Archduke Francis Frederick is a close personal friend of the Kaiser.

The first intimation of the Kaiser's illness was by wireless from Berlin "suffering from bronchial catarrh, and the postponement of his return to the front is necessary." From Berlin via The Hague this morning came a despatch saying that the condition of the patient "is declared to be satisfactory. There is no intimation of when he may return to the front."

Kaiser Has a Weak Left Side

Frederick William Victor Albert Hohenzollern, the German Emperor was born January 27, 1859, and therefore is 55. His mother, the 18-year-old daughter of Queen Victoria, suffered from a nervous disease at the time of his birth, and it was several minutes before attendants were sure that the boy lived. Not for several days was it realized that the left arm of the child was not normal. It is said that the elbow was dislocated at birth. In later life the arm and hand did not properly develop, the Kaiser having what is called a "withered" hand. He manages to conceal this defect skilfully, but there are those who affirm that the left side of the Kaiser's whole body is not normal, that the left leg tires and drags when the Kaiser walks, and that the malady in his ear from which he occasionally—and apparently now—suffers, and the neuralgic aches in his head are situated always on the left side.

GERMAN CONSUL FOR BRITAIN SENTENCED TO DEATH FOR TREASON

London, Dec. 9.— Nicholas Ahlers, former German consul in Sunderland borough, was today convicted by the Durham assizes of high treason, and sentenced to death.

The grand jury of the Durham Assizes returned a true bill against Nicholas Ahlers on a charge of high treason early in November. According to the indictment, Mr. Ahlers, was naturalized in 1905. After the declaration of war he engaged in helping German reservists leave England for Germany.

Trying to "Buy" Italy's Neutrality

London, Dec. 9.—According to current reports in Rome, Germany does not look to Italy as a possible ally, and is bending all her efforts to keep that nation out of the war. It is believed that Prince Von Buelow, the former German Chancellor now serving as ambassador to Rome, has been authorized to arrange the cession by Austria to Italy of the Province of Trent.

This province, mostly Italian territory, and populated largely by Italians has been in possession of Austria for a century.

British South Atlantic Fleet Destroys 3 German Cruisers

London, Dec. 9.—It is announced officially here today that the German cruisers Scharnhorst, Gneisenau and Leipzig were sunk on Dec. 8th, in the South Atlantic Ocean, off the Falkland Islands by the British squadron, under Vice Admiral Sturdee. Two German colliers were captured. The cruisers Dresden and Nurnberg escaped and are being pursued. The British casualties in the battle were few and no ships were lost. This announcement was made at 7.55 p.m. (London time), this evening. The statement says: "The Scharnhorst was flying the flag of Admiral Von Spee, when she went down. Some German survivors were rescued. The Sturdee reports that the Germans fought valiantly and went down with colours flying."

Paris, Dec. 9.—There was artillery fighting from the sea to the Lys during the day of December 8, according to the French official announcement given out in Paris this afternoon and all the positions occupied by the French during the past two days have been strengthened. The text of the communication follows:

"In the region of the Aisne ar[illegible] to the south there was nothing to report.

"All the positions won by us during the past two days have been organized and strengthened.

"In the region of the Aisne artillery exchanges and fighting by our infantry resulted in appreciable gains for us. Several German trenches were occupied; we made progress all along the front except at one single point; here the enemy blew up one of our trenches with a mine.

"On the heights of the Meuse our artillery showed itself distinctly master of the artillery of the enemy. In this region as well as in the Argonne we have made progress all along the entire front and occupied several of the German trenches. The same thing happened in the forest of Lepretre. In the Vosges we repulsed several attacks to the northwest of Senones."

LULL PROBABLY SOON IN PART OF THE EASTERN BATTLEFRONT

London, Dec. 9.—The centre of the German line in Russian Poland having occupied Lodz is continuing its push on to the eastward after the retiring Russians, according to official announcements made in Berlin. Notwithstanding, the [illegible] on both sides have been terrible, and the losses heavy, so that a lull probably soon will set in on this part of the eastern battlefront, while the troops recuperate.

The Russians continue to assert that their withdrawal from Lodz was a strategical necessity rather than a [illegible] but it will take future developments to show whether this claim is correct or not. [illegible] driven back from Warsaw the Germans again are in a position to advance on the capital of Russian Poland, and even the British press, which minimizes the importance of the taking of Lodz, points out that [illegible] the trench line [illegible] between [illegible] and Warsaw, which line is now held by the invaders probably [illegible] considerably to east of the [illegible] city.

THE FRENCE MAKE SUBSTANTIAL ADVANCES IN ARGONNE DISTRICT

French Artillery Continues to Demonstrate its Superiority to That of the Germans--The German Right Wing in the East Turned by the Russians--Allies Institute a General Movement Along La Bassee Canal--Germans Fear Heavy Flank Attack From Russians

Paris, Dec. 9.—Advancing along La Bassee canal, the allied forces are today endeavoring to push forward in this region in a general movement to gain control of the important highway from Roulers to Lille, Lens and Arras. The German resistance in this section is reported to have been greatly weakened by the heavy withdrawals of troops which have been sent to the eastern front, or distributed along other points of the western line threatened in the past week.

Paris, Dec. 9.—Artillery duels extend up over the entire line from the sea to the River Lys and along the Aisne, and French advances made in Argonne are reported in the official communique from the War Office today. The French artillery had the advantage over the Germans in the Aisne region. In the Argonne the Germans succeeded in dynamiting a trench, but otherwise the advantage rested with the French.

Berlin, via The Hague, Dec. 9.—The condition of Kaiser Wilhelm who is suffering from bronchial catarrh, was declared to be satisfactory today. There is no intimation of when he might return to the front. As additional details are received of the recent German success in the Lodz region, it is believed Field Marshal Von Hindenburg will be shown as having gained a victory of great importance. The German offensive has in no wise slackened in this region but owing to the numerical strength of the Russians the pursuit of the retreating forces is being conducted with utmost caution. The situation in the west is declared to be entirely satisfactory.

It is evident from the above despatch that the Germans fear a heavy flank attack from the Russians, between Lodz and Warsaw.

Petrograd, Dec. 9.—An official communication given out by the Russian general staff last night says: "The battle which began December 5, southeast of Cracow, in the region of Wielicko on the River Deriaty has developed in our favour after having courageously forced the passage of the Dounaste river in the vicinity of Nowy-Sandec our reinforcements pursued the offensive and inflicted serious defeat on the German troops, which had followed the Valley of Losnyn. The German right wing, which was pursued was turned."

AMERICAN NAVAL EXPERTS MAKE LIGHT OF THE SUBMARINE TERROR

Washington, Dec. 9.—From Admiral Fletcher hero of Vera Cruz the House Naval committee today heard the submarine terror riddled. He declared that Europe's war has not shown this weapon a decisive one and asserted that a "skilful enemy" need not give this weapon the opportunity to wreak havoc. He told that, though spectacular and affecting the imagination of the world, the submarine is still lacking in the power to determine a conflict. He declared battleships will still remain the deciding factors of war."

Fletcher considered New York with its fortifications, plus mines, immune from a hostile attack. He said: "As yet no lesson can be drawn from the European war to show that the value of the battleship is any less than before or that it is not the main weapon to decide a conflict in any navy."

JOSEPH SCOTT WAS FOUND NOT GUILTY OF CHARGE

Yesterday the whole time of the County Court, with His Honor Judge Huycke presiding, was taken up with a charge against a thrice married man named Joseph Scott, charged with having improper relations with a 13-year-old girl named Mary Francis. The greater part of the prosecutions' evidence is unfit for publication.

County Attorney Hatton acted as prosecutor and Mr. G. N. Gordon for the defence.

The prisoner, in the witness box, said he had only been once in the police court. That was for non-support of his children. This case was dismissed. He came from Lindsay. He was at home on the day of the alleged offence. He denied having had any improper relations with the girl. The girl deliberately lied in her evidence. He denied giving the girl 10 cents.

Rev. Mr. Price of St. George's Church, said the prisoner lives near him and the latter's reputation is good. He never heard anything against the girl's reputation either.

Mr. Howden, Reeve of Monaghan, gave testimony as to Scott's good reputation. The jury retired to consider their verdict and returned with the verdict of "not guilty."

CONVICTS AGAIN USE KNIVES

Kingston, Dec. 9.—As another result of the penitentiary investigation held last fall the convicts at the Portsmouth institution no longer eat their food out of their hands but are supplied with knives, forks and spoons. They were allowed to eat their meals in a large dining room and to use knives for this until about fifteen years ago, when owing to a plot to kill the guards and escape the privilege was discontinued.

Literary Doctors

The fact that the celebrated American physician, Dr. Silas Weir Mitchell, who died recently at Philadelphia, had a distinct reputation in the literary world as a poet and novelist, calls to mind several other instances of relationship between pill and quill. Dr. Mitchell's best novel "Hugh Wynne, Free Quaker," created almost as much interest as some of the stories of Sir Arthur Conan Doyle, who got his ideas for "Sherlock Holmes" while walking the Edinburgh infirmary under the eye of that remarkable surgeon, Dr. Joseph Bell.

Another Scottish doctor, Dr. John Brown, was the immortal author of "Rab and His Friends." Ricardo Stephens, the author of "The Cruciform Mark" and "The Wooing of Grey Eyes," practices and writes in Braemar, [illegible] in the heart of a deer forest.

Sir Frederick Treves, who achieved the highest eminence as a surgeon, has since become one of the most widely read authors of the day; while Sir Ronald Ross, who has done remarkable work in tropical diseases, acquired high repute for his writing on general scientific subjects. Robert Bridges, the Poet Laureate, is a doctor, and among [illegible], Dr. Lillias Hamilton and Dr. Margaret Todd (Graham Travers) are both well known writers of fiction.

VARIOUS METHODS OF PRESERVING EGGS

They Must be Fresh in the First Place and Should be Scrupulously Clean

There is no better method of preserving eggs than in water-glass, or soluble silicate of soda, which is not an expensive material to buy, as a pound, which only costs a very few cents, dissolved in the correct proportion of water, will preserve a large number. The amount of water to be added depends upon the sample, but as full directions are usually sent with each tin, it is difficult to go wrong. The eggs are placed in a glazed vessel, and covered with the liquid, care being taken that all the eggs are submerged. When they are wanted for use, they should be gently lifted out of the liquid, wiped dry, and used as speedily as possible.

The oldest, but still a very excellent method of preserving is by means of salt, lime and water. Four gallons of lime, one of salt, and twenty of water, should be mixed together, and when the water has taken into solution as much lime and salt as it is capable of doing, it should be allowed to settle, the clear liquid being used to pour over the eggs, which have previously been placed in a suitable vessel. This method has the disadvantage of making the shells rough and extremely brittle—so much so, in fact, that, as a rule, eggs that have been preserved in lime cannot be boiled, the shells cracking with the least touch. When eggs are to be preserved for only a very short time—for two or three months—dry salt answers admirably, but this is an unsuitable method for a longer period.

If a new-laid egg be dipped into boiling water, it slightly coagulates the white, and so prevents the air getting to the contents. For home use this method is suitable, but it does not answer when the eggs are for market. Smearing with vaseline or butter keeps the contents fresh for a week or two, but is not recommended for more than a month.

Only perfectly fresh eggs should be preserved, and it is largely a waste of labor and money to attempt keeping eggs that are more than two or three days old when placed in the preservative. They should be allowed to settle twelve hours after being laid, but the sooner after this time they can be treated the better will they be when they are wanted for use. Dirty eggs do not preserve at all well, and if there is any dirt on the shells they should be washed. A dirty egg has an injurious effect not only on its own contents, but on all those that come into contact therewith. As infertile eggs preserve better than those containing a germ, it is advisable when producing eggs with this end in view to keep the hens apart from the male birds.

OUR PUBLIC SPIRIT

Scotchman Says Unpleasant Things About Canadians

A young Scotchman, after three years in the Canadian West, wrote a letter to the London Everyman describing in unvarnished terms some of the Canadian characteristics, says The Ottawa Citizen. They can hardly be said on the whole to be complimentary, which doubtless makes their expression all the more valuable from the Canadian standpoint. It is always well to "see oursels as ithers see us" and a touch of Scotch opinion may in this case help to improve the spirit of Canada. One of his criticisms regarding the latter is as follows:

"Nor does the public spirit of the Dominion strike a stranger as abundant. It does not find its expression in the Territorial forces, at any rate, which are manned, out of all proportion, by home-born Britons. Certain Canadians suffer from the gratifying belief that the Dominion saved the effete Empire in 1901, and are indignant when told that of the Canadian contingent sent to South Africa eighty per cent. were home countrymen. Nor does public spirit find much expression in local government, where the 'best people' are conspicuously absent—too busy making money to bother with such matters."

Without discussing the incident of 1901, The Citizen says by way of comment, the truth of the rest of the criticism must be confessed. Canadians have been so busy with the multifarious tasks of a new country that they have not had much time to devote to the interests of the country at large. But early Canada has now advanced in development to such an extent that more attention can be given to the public interest. Unless such attention is given, no greatness of future can be safely predicted. That public spirit that makes a citizen think and feel and act for Canada, as for his larger self, is without doubt the great need of Canada to-day. Others recognize the fact, and Canadians cannot too soon follow their example, and profit by it.

Newly-laid Eggs

Bacteriologists tell us that in an egg evaporation and the action of bacteria are evident by the third or fourth day. There are some who believe that from that time on the egg is not perfectly "fresh," or "new laid," or any other name that should mean the best. It is edible for some time after that if kept properly, but it is not of first quality, and all the statements to that effect cannot make it so. If the farmer has to have longer time than three days to get his eggs to the consumer, he should have to classify them other than the highest, and he cannot expect to compete with the poultryman who delivers his product 72 hours old.

Beets For Cattle

If beets are fed to cows in the barn in large quantities the place should be well cleaned up and aired before each feeding, else the effect on the atmosphere will be so bad it will taint the milk.

RACETRACK ROGUES IN THE OLD COUNTRY

Swindling Operatives Who Happily Have Few Counterparts in the Dominion

The racecourse is notoriously a happy hunting-ground for thousands of scheming rogues, who visit the principal race meetings with the sole intention of relieving the unsophisticated sportsman of his money by fair means or unfair—mostly unfair, says a writer in the Glasgow Herald. Some of the schemes are exceedingly clever, but others again are as old as the hills, and it is really surprising to find a public gullible enough to swallow them.

A common piece of thick tape, about two feet long and half an inch wide, is doubled up and folded round like a catherine-wheel. The operator then places it upon a table, and bets the eager onlookers odds of three to one that they cannot insert a pointed skewer in one of the loops so as to retain the garter when he pulls it. As there are about thirty similar loops visible, it is small wonder that the proprietor very rarely has to pay up.

This swindle is usually well watched by pick-pockets, as they have a splendid chance of plying their trade amongst the players.

The Race-table Swindle

The numerous race-tables scattered all over most racing grounds have an irresistible attraction for many would-be sports. Painted upon these tables are presumed likenesses of the various horses engaged in the big race for the day, and in the centre of the table is a revolving spindle.

The gentleman in charge of the gaming apparatus sets odds against the spindle stopping at any particular one of the various colored races. His confederates stand around, and, by their remarkable luck in backing long-priced winners time after time, induce outsiders to bet heavily.

The backers never win, as the cunning race-game swindler has more than one artifice by which he can slow down the pointer to any horse he chooses.

"Welshers," or bogus-bookmakers, swarm at probably every racetrack course in the United Kingdom and they always work with half-a-dozen or more confederates who pretend to place bets with them.

Innocent Victims

When the welsher realizes that it is about time for him to disappear, a common practice is to offer his high stool to a spectator, "the better to see the race run," as he suavely puts it. Many a simpleton has had to run for dear life after availing himself of such an offer.

During the Derby won by Diamond Jubilee a welsher, about to depart for pastures new, offered his stool to a countryman standing near, who instantly jumped at the offer. He also obligingly held the bookmaker's satchel, which it is needless to say, was innocent of money. Then the welsher bolted, and the backers of Diamond Jubilee nearly killed the guileless yokel ere he was rescued by a body of police, his clothes being torn to shreds.

The Racecourse Sharper

For real cleverness, mug-lumberers, or "tale-tellers" as they are termed in the picturesque vernacular of the turf, are undoubtedly entitled to the blue ribbon of racing swindles.

A sharper of this type is an unerring judge of character, and it does not take him long to pick out a "mug," as the youth with more money than brains is known.

When thoroughly in his victim's confidence, the sharper, as a huge favor, tells him there is a great system of backing horses in existence, of which he—the sharper—is the sole inventor, and if Mr. Simple has any spare cash to invest he has a chance of making a small fortune. At first the poor victim is allowed to win a little; but gradually all the money of which he is possessed finds its way into his affable friend's pocket.

KING OF UMPIRES

Gaffney Brought Arbitrator's Work up to Modern Pitch

While John H. Gaffney, who died at his home in Worcester recently, was known as the king of umpires, he was not the first arbitrator to be honored by that title, writes Old Sport Hough in the Philadelphia Inquirer. Honest John Kelly was the original king of umpires, although it always was a question whether he was really the best of the umpires of his time. But there was one honor no one could take from him. When he was operating, he was the boss of the field, and that was long before the umpires were clothed with the almost autocratic power they are to-day. And then, think of the mobs he had to face in those days. Compared with those the most turbulent of present-day crowds are mild and orderly. But, no matter how tough the going was, nothing seemed to bother Kelly, who, on one occasion, hopped the fence in order to get at his tormentors in the right field bleachers. Gaffney, though, was the originator of modern umpiring. He was the first man to go behind the pitcher when there was a runner on, he was always over the play, and was the first umpire the Old Sport can recall who made it a point to be both blind and deaf at times.

Keeping Racing Straight

When an English racing man—owner or trainer—is "warned off the Newmarket Heath," it means that he is not allowed to attend a recognized race meeting in the British isles; that any horse trained by him cannot compete in any recognized race, and that he cannot be even part owner of any horse eligible to compete. Apart from taking the trainer's life from him it is difficult to imagine any more drastic punishment.

Apples in New Dishes Tempt Taste

By Ann Marie Lloyd

APPLES have risen in value to such an extent in recent years that they have become more of a luxury than in the old days when they were standbys on every table. Here are some recipes calling for their use:

APPLE SAUCE CAKE.

One cup strained apple sauce, one cup of light brown sugar, half a cup of butter, or, if you have it, mix beef fat which has been tried and clarified with the butter in equal proportions, one and three-quarters cups flour, a teaspoonful each of baking soda and of salt, and half a teaspoonful of mace, cloves and cinnamon. Cream the butter and sugar and add the apple sauce. Then add the flour, salt, soda and spices, which have been well mixed. Beat briskly and bake one hour in a medium hot oven, using a deep pan.

In the days when eggs are at a premium this cake will be found pleasing to the housekeeper who counts expense.

SLICED APPLES IN JELLY.

Make a gelatine jelly, either pink or white, and flavor with lemon or wine, only be sure that the gelatine is well flavored. As it is poured into the mould place slices of apples thickly through it. Serve with custard sauce or with whipped cream, flavored with vanilla.

APPLE CHARLOTTE.

Soak one tablespoonful of gelatine in three tablespoonfuls of cold water, and when it is softened dissolve in a quarter of a cup of boiling water. Add a quarter of a cup of sugar, a tablespoonful of lemon juice and half a cup of strained apple sauce. Set in a cool place till it is chilled and stiffened around the edges of the pan, then beat steadily with an egg beater, adding gradually one cup of whipped cream. Beat until it is stiff enough to drop from the beater in a mass. Then pour into moulds and chill. This is delicious, and may be served with a thin custard or with a fruit syrup, or it is good enough to appeal to the most fastidious palate without any sauce.

If desired, the stiffly beaten whites of two eggs may be substituted for the cream, in which case the yolks of the eggs would be used for the custard.

FRIED APPLES.

More mundane but very pleasing to the average person is the dish known in New England as fried apples and onions.

Fry dice of salt pork in the frying pan till they are crisp. Then remove the pork and use the fat. Add slices of apple unpeeled and half as much sliced onion and keep covered, frying slowly until it is thoroughly cooked. Care should be taken in stirring not to break the apples or the onions. It is better to lift the mass from the bottom of the pan with a broad knife than to stir, for the latter operation is apt to make a mussy dish. This is a dish which accords well with baked country sausages.

THE trying moments of life are not all in the battlefield. Unexpectedly, unavoidably, with no chance of escape, the most dreadful crises may confront the best of us, and even a naturally courageous soul has a momentary quiver.

Most trying of all is to face great danger under observation—to know that your way of meeting the danger is WATCHED. You may be flanked by the best possible moral support, but when the danger is directed at YOU the danger is YOURS.

Steady, then! If your heart leaps into your throat, swallow it like a man. If great things have always been expected of you, live up to the expectations. Keep your nerve. Look the peril in the eye. Be a MAN.

To you thereafter will belong the sense of satisfaction of a victory well won. If you nearly died of fright, no one knows it.

Secrets of Health and Happiness

Age Old Superstitions Live Despite Education

By Dr. LEONARD KEENE HIRSHBERG

DR. L. K. HIRSHBERG

"TIS a history handed from ages down; a nurse's tale—which children, open eyed and mouthed, devour. And thus, as garrulous ignorance relates, we learn it and believe."

Thus came poetically a calm comment upon the charms and potions and direful portents as well as the magic healings of seventh sons of seventh sons, swallowed hook, line and sinker by the supereducated civilized.

Peter Pan rushed to the footlights with her startling demand: "Do you believe in fairies?" You smile patronizingly and indulgently to yourself. You flatter your own ego that you of all others have not a superstitious bone in your body. Yet you, like ninety odd Americans and English in every hundred, are chock-full of absurd, unreasoning and illogical habits.

Superstition is only a habit of a larger growth. It is often as difficult as to avoid supping with Pluto or dining with Mahomet, to draw the line between habit, custom and superstitition.

Do you, old friend, believe that after 20,000 and more years of widely diffused knowledge, education and civilization, these same knowing folk are without superstitions? No, you do not.

Today there are as many superstitions as there were thousands of years before Tyre and Carthage. Superstitions have not disappeared; they have merely changed their forms.

Some Foolish Fallacies.

Whereas a piece of paper which contained the names of the seven sleepers of Ephesus was once used to "ward off demons, diseases and ghosts"—you laugh? Wait, you are just as illogical yourself—now university graduates and lesser mortals all wear devices that are little better than "charms."

There is Prof. G——, one of the best chemists in the Johns Hopkins University, who defies all syllogisms and sickness by employing fallacious mummeries upon himself and his family instead of summoning scientific aid.

There is also another clinical professor who has a prudish instinct that he can read men's characters and hearts by merely looking at them. He believes that malaria is the only disease.

So it goes. Some believe going under a ladder, or sitting down with thirteen, or working on Friday brings bad luck.

Even worse are the foolish fallacies—often in their nonsensical adherence, bringing death—associated with health and illness. "Seventh month babies" are erroneously thought to outlive "eight month" ones.

Boy or girl babies are absurdly supposed to be influenced by the antecedent postures of the mother. Another ridiculous and unhappy fiction, responsible for many sleepless nights, is the prevalent notion that "babies will rupture themselves if allowed to cry themselves out."

Wrong Guesses Forgotten.

"Taking cold in a bed" or in any open wound is equally destructive of intelligence and subversive of medical progress. "Colds" are infectious accompanied by bacteria. Therefore a "cure," or a "bed," cannot "take cold." They have all the "colds" they can catch.

"Get-well-quick" remedies are also likely to be alluring fallacies, sought by the well beloved and ever illogical civilized person.

Talismans, like the weather prophets and betters on horse races, have a happy-go-lucky knack of always forgetting and ignoring the multitudes of wrong guesses.

Darwin once said he was always compelled perforce to jot down in writing the exceptions to any opinion or theory he held. Only in this way was he able to disprove 99 in every 100 of the theories and generalizations which forever kept popping into even his logical thoughts.

Bettors on horses and those who believe in signs, the "influence of mind over matter," and similar old purses made of sow's ears, always emphasize the things which appear to support their habits of thought.

"Agents of Evil."

At the same time they overlook the 90-odd per cent. of contradictions. There is absolutely no truth in these well-nigh universal beliefs. The effects emphasized occur by accident.

Folklore Signs and Omens

By Elizabeth Hayward

NOTWITHSTANDING the bravado of the Thirteen Club and President Wilson, who was born on the 13th of the month and has come to regard it as his lucky day, the superstition in regard to the unlucky [illegible] number thirteen is widespread. [illegible] experts will tell you [illegible] an office or apartment [illegible] in exact dealing [illegible] the unlucky number. Young ladies rarely choose the 13th of the month for a wedding day, and it is practically known that even strong-minded persons are [illegible] where there are only 13 present. This comes from an old notion that one of the 13 generally [illegible] in a twelvemonth. Its origin is popularly credited to the idea that there were 13 present at the Last Supper, Judas being the 13th.

Another superstition, equally popular, is that ill luck will follow the spilling of salt at the table. If the salt is spilled while being passed from one person to another it foretells a quarrel. In any event the accident is supposed to indicate sorrow or trouble to the person spilling the salt, and to counteract this evil a pinch of the salt should be thrown over the right shoulder. In the Fable of the Farmer's Wife and the Raven, the poet Gay speaks of this fancy:

[illegible]

However, the ill luck, it was believed, might be averted by a second helping. [illegible] and by some writers is believed to have grown out of the fact that salt was used in religious sacrifices, and to spill it, which [illegible] on the head of the victim [illegible].

[illegible] was considered by the ancients as [illegible] and as the accepted emblem of friendship. It is [illegible] thought their friendship would be [illegible].

Salt is also one of the prime ingredients of many charms against the machinations of the witches, over whose malignant activities some of our forefathers used to have been very much concerned. For instance, many a housewife, even to this day, as she kneads her loaf, before placing it in the oven to bake, marks it with the sign of the cross. She may tell you that this is to provide for the escape of the steam and gas generated in baking, but her grandmother knew better; it was to prevent the witches putting a spell on the loaf that would keep it from "rising."

Speaking of bread, if a loaf accidentally breaks in the hand while an unmarried woman is cutting it it is a sign that she will not be married in a twelvemonth, or that there will be a serious disaster in her family. Turning a loaf upside down after cutting it was an omen of ill luck [illegible]. A crust of bread carried in the pocket was thought to insure good luck not many years ago.

The Science of Housework

XX.

HOUSEWORK," said my wife, "is very monotonous."

"So is life," I hinted.

"No, but honestly, Peter," said Mary, "any woman will tell you that housekeeping is the most monotonous work there is! And it's very unerving!"

Now, I have heard this old, old plaint from disgruntled women so many times that it invariably fires me to argument.

"I wonder," said I, reflectively, "if it's any more monotonous than the dull work of a petty clerk who sticks to his desk from morning to night and eats, dreams and thinks nothing but figures?"

"Of course, it is," said Mary, with that pretty air of decision which women frequently employ when they are not quite sure of themselves.

"Or the hour by hour drudgery of an old man who's done book-keeping all his life?"

"It's the hardest, most confusing work in the world, too!" pouted Mary.

"What?" I [illegible]. "Book-keeping?"

"No," said Mary, "I mean housework, of course. I was at the card club this afternoon and we were all talking about it. Every woman there felt the same as I do—that housework is perfectly horrid."

"Well," said I, "it has never seemed to me that a day's work which permits an afternoon nap, or attendance at various afternoon social events, was particularly trying."

"Peter!"

"It's true, Mary," I insisted pleasantly. "If I had time to attend a matinee or a ball game every afternoon and time to get into a bathrobe and doze away a couple of hours, I'd say I had a pretty easy time of it."

"It can't be easy, Peter, or all women wouldn't hate it so."

"Women," I ventured thoughtfully, "are so accustomed to hate housework, that it's a part of their creed. The daughter learns it automatically from the mother even before she's tried her own hand at it. And to my notion it's a mighty poor way of beginning—prejudiced, I mean, against the form of work you've elected to do for life.

"Suppose I rebelled against eight hours a day of money-getting. Such a grudging attitude would be bound to influence the success of my work. Don't you think that airing all these old bromides about housework influenced women to discontent?"

"You've never had to do the ordering," countered Mary loosely.

"Mary," I said patiently, "I don't know—I may be wrong, of course, but it does seem to me that if women would make of their homes—and home-keeping—a business proposition, run absolutely on a business basis instead of a kind of drudgery to be [illegible], the world would be [illegible]. I'd like to see women run the [illegible] of the world just as men run the offices.

"Make a list of household and favorite [illegible]. Study the chemistry of food. Buy by [illegible] instead of selecting [illegible] anything in the [illegible] the grocer happens to carry. A buyer for a business concern buys with the utmost precaution and buys wherever he gets the best price. Let the housekeeper do that. Let her keep scrupulous account of every cent she spends, apportion her expenses and replace worn-out material just as the business man does. Let her balance her books with the care of a book-keeper——"

"But, Peter," objected Mary with wide eyes, "it would take all day——"

I sighed.

"Why shouldn't it, Mary?" I begged humbly. "After all every man-jack of us ought to have to work eight hours a day. It's wholesome."

"Peter!"

"Try it, Mary," I advised hopefully. "See if you aren't happier [illegible] from morning to night. You'll save money, you'll build up a systematic machine that will run smoothly from week to week and you'll find yourself taking an honest zest in your work. After all, Mary, it is a business—a great big job of real dignity that requires brains to swing."

"It isn't," said Mary, "it's easy and [illegible] and very monotonous."

She Gets It.

"Do you think a woman should get a man's wages?"

"Not unless she's his wife."

Thrifty.

"He says it is cheaper to travel than to stay at home."

"It may be for him. I heard him say once that he never gives tips."

Willing.

She—What did papa say?

He—Well, he offered to pay for the railroad tickets if we would elope.

The Other Way.

"Did he mortgage his farm to buy the auto?"

"No. He bought the auto as a step to 'back to the farm.'"

The Same Effect.

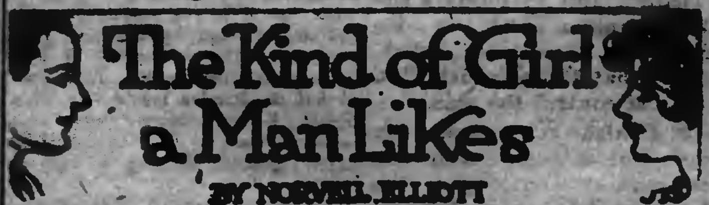
"Did you never lie to your wife?"

"Well, I wouldn't say that. But I never told a lie that she believed."

Largely Imaginary.

"He says he made his fortune in Wall street."

"I guess that's right. It has no existence elsewhere."



The Kind of Girl a Man Likes

BY NORVELL ELLIOTT

The Stylish Girl

PACKS of style" was the brief comment of my bachelor friend, as Frances Gordon and her escort sauntered by. Everybody we knew was attending the annual art exhibit, and, though there were many beautiful and attractive looking girls, not one of them could boast a more stunning gown than that worn by Frances.

"And yet, come to think of it," I answered, "that gown isn't really so chic. Wonder what it really is that sets Frances's gowns aside as being more stylish than the ordinary girl's."

"Individuality," answered my bachelor friend, and I heaved a genuine sigh of satisfaction.

"I could not tell you whether her skirt is shirred or pleated, ruffled or flounced, short or long, striped or plain," continued my friend, "but I do know the general cut and color suit Frances. And I do know she wears her clothes well. To most men these are the only standards by which they judge whether a woman has or has not style. Dressed like a fashion plate never spells 'style' to me. Certainly a woman's dress, coat or hat must follow the general lines in vogue, but too conscientious a following of the prevailing styles makes the wearer simply a manikin—a model on which to display some designer's creation of a costume. The woman who has a style of her own will have ideas of her own and see that these ideas are carried out in the details of her costume.

"It doesn't take money to make a stylish dress. It does take taste and an artistic eye. Frances, I understand, is up against it financially. Yet she is an artist born, and by blending the right colors and using the right material, manages to have harmonious dresses and pretty millinery creations. One day I [illegible] as she was coming out of a five and ten-cent store, and she frankly admitted she had found a perfect love of a blue flower which she intended to——"

"Wear with a violet dress," I supplied, remembering a certain color scheme recently donned by Frances which had been the envy of every girl who saw it.

"Style in dress does not mean the latest thing in cut," continued the critic, who seemed to enjoy giving vent to a manly outburst on the subject. "Style means, first, an adaptation of the costume to the woman who is wearing it; second, perfect harmony in color from the tip of her plume to the bow on her slipper; third, perfect harmony in design—not a colonial hat and a Louis XVI coat; fourth, it must appear as a background and as though it were made to frame the girl, never as though the girl were imported to show off the gown."

"You sound like a fashion designer," I laughed into his serious face.

"Well, goodness knows if more of us men had our way we could give the women we know some ideas which would beat those old French designers all to pieces. After all, you dress for us, not for them. Why on earth don't wives, daughters and sweethearts consult the American men occasionally on the subject!"

"Now, tell me, honestly," I asked, "do I dress so miserably——"

"Oh, there you go, you women always take everything a man says straight to heart and make it a personal matter. Why, [illegible], you know what I think of your taste—you and Frances shine out like two stars in this medley of living models. These other women may be called stylish, but you girls have—style."

MUSIC AND DRAMA

The Whitney Opera Company, equipped with abundance of scenery and costumes, [illegible] Whitney's [illegible] The Chocolate Soldier [illegible] Grand Opera House on Wednesday, December 30th, matinee and night.

Though operas in no small number have flocked from Vienna to this land through America's partiality for Viennese music, none of them has ever disturbed the esteem and popularity of Oscar Straus' fascinating musical embodiment of the exploits, the loves, and comic deeds of the Chocolate Soldier, as set forth by George Bernard Shaw in [illegible] Day and [illegible] comedy, in his satiric romance, "Arms and the Man." Shaw's merry flings at the [illegible] notions of war, heroes, courage, love, and so forth, and the [illegible] romances of his people in which they display the harmless weaknesses of human nature at every turn, furnish a lively background for the blithe and joyous melody of Straus. True Statesmanship

Sir Robert Borden, Premier of Canada, presented the full force of the case against Germany in the present war in his masterly speech before the Montreal Canadian Club on Tuesday night. His was an utterance born of a statesmanlike imagination, representing thoughtful consideration of the moving events which are seen to-day upon the European stage, coupled with a keen analysis of what this war means to the British people and to the world at large. Sir Robert's summing up of the situation, in all its aspects, must take rank with the best efforts of British statesmen who have given eloquent voice to the sentiments which thrill the British people and move them to warlike endeavours.

Particularly happy was Sir Robert's comparison of the British and German systems of Government, in which he brought out into relief those essential principles of democractic control which, particularly to the people of the Western world give to British Government its most endearing quality. He traced the progress of Government in Great Britain to show that only in the dim, distant past were British monarchs or ministers of the Crown endowed with sufficient arbitrary power to be able to launch the country upon a desperate war which, in its very nature, implied the disregard of public opinion. And he flayed the German system which, in defiance of the kindlier qualities of democracy, utilized the full strength of a great nation to build up the most powerful military system in history, and to follow a naval programme which, in its very essence, constituted a challenge to that Power which, if it live, must control the seas.

Of British statesmen, Sir Robert Borden is one who can speak with authority upon the question of the German menace. He has displayed in the past an intelligent grasp of the situation. Events have vindicated his course. At all times he has been ready to lend a sympathetic ear, as representative of the Canadian people, to the needs of British statesmen to whom, at this time of crisis, Canada is lending, with the heartiest according of her people, all possible aid. No public man, in Great Britain or elsewhere, is able to-day to control to a great degree public confidence in his utterances on this question of the war with Germany, once an "emergency," now a fact. Sir Robert stands before the people to-day representing a statesmanship which was competent to grant to his country a leadership fitted to guard against and ward off the danger that was to come and is now here.

What is the [illegible] of such statesmanship to-day?

Sir Robert Borden's speech supplies the answer. Out of his calm, logical and dignified interpretation of the present crisis, the Canadian people must draw new inspiration to [illegible] them to even greater activity to carry on the war.

Lame Back Strengthened, Stiffness Taken Right Out

Was Relieved [illegible] Hour, and Cured in a Night

A lame back! Quite unnecessary. All you have to do is to rub on Nerviline. It's simply a wonder for backache—relieves after one application. "Nothing possibly could [illegible] an aching back faster than Nerviline," writes Mrs. Arthur Kelley [illegible] Lower Chelsea, N.S. "I caught cold and was so prostrated with pain I could not bend over. We always have Nerviline at home, and I had the painful region rubbed thoroughly with this grand liniment. At once the pain departed. The lameness was rapidly reduced and in an hour I was able to be about my housework. I was rubbed again just before retiring, and awoke as usual in the morning without a sign of my back trouble."

There is no sort of muscular pain that Nerviline won't cure quickly. Thousands swear by it for rheumatism, neuralgia, sciatica and lumbago. It sinks to the core of the pain—right through muscle, tissue and nerve—it penetrates where no oily greasy liniment can go and invariably cures quickly. If you have an ache or a pain anywhere—use Nerviline—it will cure you. Family size bottle, very large 50c; trial size 25c, at all dealers.

It is reported that the German line of communication is broken but we don't believe it. The Sayville wireless and Count Von Bernstorff continue to work overtime.

Some military experts are talking of the end of the war through "financial exhaustion." But the way to it is probably as long as the way to Tipperary.

GERMAN LOSSES IN POLAND ARE TREMENDOUS

Petrograd, Dec. [illegible].—Russian guns are today hammering at the inner defences of Cracow.

It is reported here today that Gen. Dimitrieff has reached the city with a force of more than [illegible] men. The Austrian forces outside the city have withdrawn, it is declared.

The War Office still refuses to admit the capture of Lodz by the German forces. The engagement is still in progress in that region. It is stated that the Russian losses in this fighting have been heavy, but some estimates place the German casualties in the general fighting as high as 100,000.

German Dead Piled Waist High

After the retreat of the Germans upon Stryhow, bodies were found piled in heaps waist high, survivors still endeavoring to fight their way out of the Russian wedge closing in on them, and in some instances entrenched themselves behind piles of the bodies of their comrades.

Battle in East Not Decided

London, Dec. 8.—(Special Cable.)—Whether Lodz has been occupied by the Germans or is still held by the Russians, it is evident today that the fighting in the east is still far from a decision.

There is no confirmation at Petrograd of the capture of Lodz by the Germans. Instead, the Russians claim a victory in that region. The Berliner Tageblatt today modifies the German claims by saying: "Our victory may be considered a rupture in the Russian lines. It can only positively be called a victory, however, if the Russian [illegible] is followed by a German pursuit. If the pursuit is successful then the German centre is quite strong enough to act with force against the northern and southern parts of the broken Russian army."

THE RUSSIAN INFANTRY IMPREGNABLE

London, Dec. 7.—The Times correspondent writes from Petrograd:

"The fighting near Lodz has been marked by many stirring episodes. The Novoe Vremya correspondent writes that during attacks by the Siberian Cavalry at Rzgow, Brozin, Tuskin and Lask and on the line to Zgierz-Strykow will be commemorated in history. The forest between Brezin and Krupin is a continuous German graveyard.

"One Russian regiment, which already has won renown early in the war, charged a howitzer battery of the enemy. The centre broke before the hellish fire, but nothing could arrest the rush on the flanks.

They cut down the gunners, captured the howitzers and cleared the way for the infantry. How unexpected and terrible was this joint attack appeared from the firing of the village of Krupin, where maddened German soldiers were seeking refuge. They were burned alive when Russian shells set the huts on fire.

"Wednesday morning the Germans left Zgierz to storm Lodz, but did not reach even the Russian trenches. The Czar's infantry received the German columns on their bayonets, while the Russian batteries shelled them. The Germans strained every effort to pierce the Russian infantry line, but in vain."

INTRODUCTION

The Glenaladale Silver Black Fox Company, Limited, was incorporated in 1913 with six pairs of foxes, at [illegible]. This Company re-capitalized in 1914, with 20 pairs of [illegible] Silver Black Foxes, at $15,000 per pair, making a total capitalization of $300,000.

THE FOXES

Six pairs (one year old) proven breeders, and fourteen pairs (1914 pups), making a total of 20 pairs — all young foxes— good for at least 20 years. This Company has bought some of this year's options on foxes with a guarantee that they are pedigreed and of the highest strain and very best quality P. E. Island [illegible]

This Company can truthfully say [illegible] Glenaladale Silver Black Fox Company, Limited, will ask you to do nothing like that. We want to let you in on the ground floor.

NOTICE

When a fox company guarantees any special dividend to its shareholders, and when said company is an incorporated body, you need not be afraid of any unfair play, for such company is compelled to pay what they promise, and, besides, every interest is taken for the welfare of both the investor and the company.

The promoters of this Company are all above board and will not permit any crook to come in and do anything that is not right. Anyone holding stock in this Company who is dissatisfied can, by notifying the Secretary-Treasurer, have his or her money promptly refunded.

FORTUNES IN FOXES

There is money in fox ranching more than anything else ever known. It is good for the rich man and good for the poor man. A poor man cannot buy a pair of Silver Black Foxes but he can easily raise $25.00, $50.00 or $100.00. By investing in this Company he gets back his money in at least two years and then he will have an income for life and for his children to come—and after those will be money in fox farming. One of the reasons for this is that P. E. Island has now 95 per cent. of the world's foxes in captivity. For every one pelt that can be raised there are more than 25 wealthy people waiting for it in London, Russia, France and America.

PELT VALUES

The Fox Pelts have advanced greatly in price since 1910 and you can see for yourself what money was in them then.

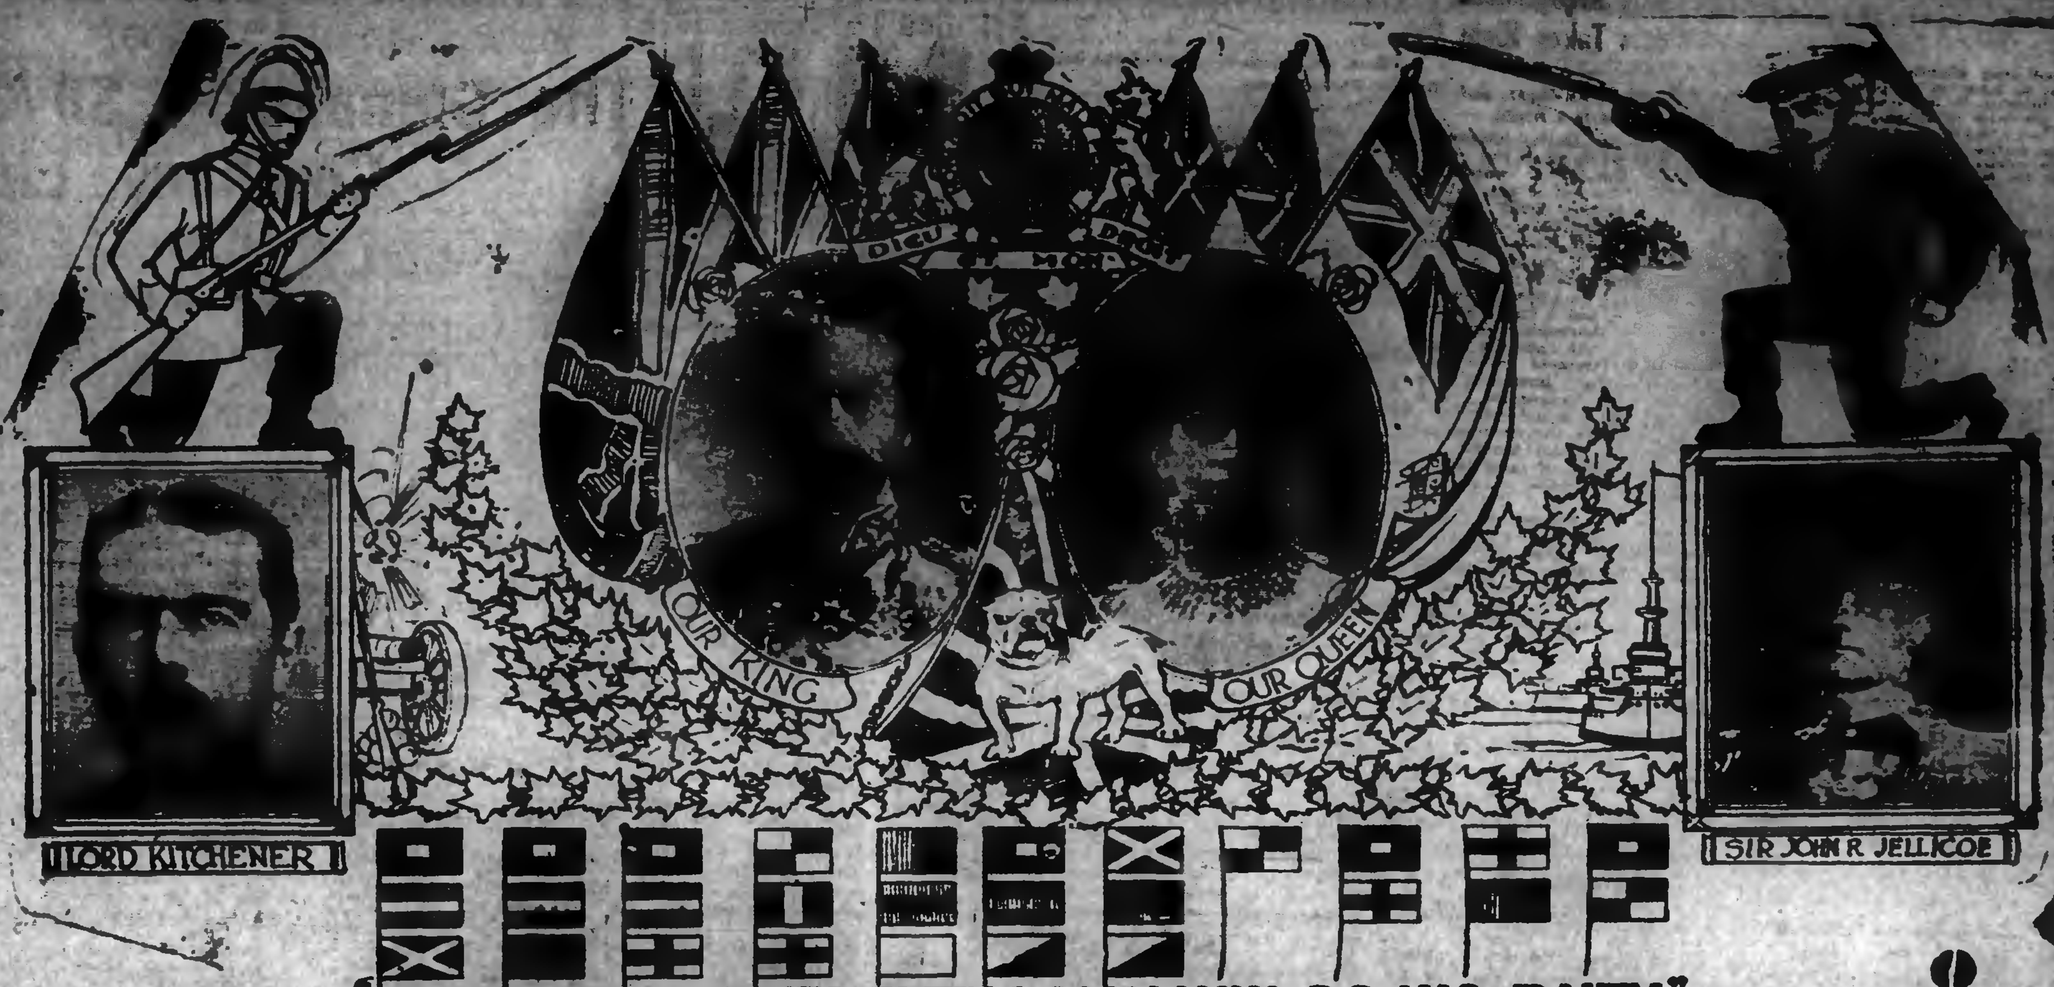
BELGIANS SHOW LAST WORD IN PLUCK

Toronto, Dec. 8.—"In all our cases so far we have just had three Englishmen, and all the rest are Belgians," writes Miss [illegible] a Toronto nurse, who is at present in the [illegible] at Folkestone in Kent. [illegible] are wonderful. They are so patient and gentle, and say "Merci, beaucoup" for everything we do for them. They brought a boy of [illegible] week, and as they [illegible] with his eyes closed he looked just like a baby. He was such a dear little fellow. We got the bullet out, and now he is getting better and wants to go back to fight again.

The only time the Belgians grow bitter is when they talk of the Germans and the terrible things they have done to their women and children. Then their faces grow [illegible]. Some of the true stories they tell are fearful, and sometimes [illegible] [illegible] I should like to be there. [illegible] [illegible] are [illegible].

"The work is tremendous. We often have as many as forty emergency cases all at once, and I spent all yesterday in the operating room. We are so tired at night that we just [illegible]



"ENGLAND EXPECTS EVERY MAN WILL DO HIS DUTY"

Give! Give! Give!

A Call to Peterborough in the Name of Women and Children!

"Lord, God of Hosts, be with us yet,
Lest we forget, Lest we forget."

The tramp of the bread-winners is in the streets. They are going to the front. They are leaving families behind.

Every man with women of his own—every man with little children—knows what a tragedy to the home is the going of the bread-winner.

We call on the people to rally to the protection of these mothers, sisters, wives and children so suddenly deprived of their natural protectors.

$50,000
IN THREE DAYS

A GREAT CAMPAIGN is under way to raise $50,000 in Three Days for a War Relief Fund. This money is for the women and children of the soldiers who go to the front—money for fuel, for rent, for clothing, for food.

NOW IS THE TIME to raise the money—not weeks hence when hardship and suffering have already begun. Now is the time to wipe away every care of the soldier going to the front. Now is the time to wipe away every barrier to enlistment. Now is the time for Peterborough to show the world the Canadian's conception of his duty to dependent womanhood and childhood.

Surely no contribution permitted by your means can be considered too great for such a cause as this; and no contribution can be too small to be welcomed.

On Wednesday, Thursday and Friday, Dec. 9-10-11, ten teams of ten each, citizens of Peterborough, will give their entire time to the work. They will see personally, every one who should contribute. Be ready for them. Don't disappoint. It is your duty to yourself, your home, your country.

The standing of the men associated with this work is a guarantee of the able administration of the fund. It will be expended under the most careful supervision. The need and the worthiness of every case will be clearly established.

Britain calls for her best sons in this great emergency! Let no man who would fight for the glory of the British Empire be held back because he is needed at home.

Give! Give! Give!

Now is the time to remember the Women and Children.

"Lord, God of Hosts, be with us yet,
Lest we forget, Lest we forget."

The Idea of the Canadian Patriotic Fund is This:

The soldiers have gone to fight, not for their home town or for any particular locality, but for all Canada.

The whole of Canada should combine to take proper care of their families.

The Fund is one Fund, and in each locality is administered by the local branch.

In Peterborough, for instance, the families of the soldiers will be looked after by the local branch acting for the National Association.

All the families throughout Canada will receive aid on the same basis, and none will be neglected.

This is a sensible and patriotic plan. Peterborough will fall in line. Do all you can, but do it now.

The Local, or Contingent Relief Side of the Peterborough Patriotic Fund

Is for the purpose of aiding families who may be in need owing to the war, through lack of work.

There are many such, and will be more.

They must be judiciously aided and not want.

NON-DRINKING SHEEP

Apparently Thrive Without Water Except Dew and Plant Juice

Sheep on the Nebo national forest range, Utah, go four and a half months without water except for such moisture as they get from the dew and the juices of forage plants.

Grazing sheep on a range entirely destitute of water is a recent innovation due to the increasing demand for forage and the efforts of the forestry officers to find a place on the forest ranges for all the stock that can safely be admitted. The area on the Nebo which has proved usable by sheep is high and rocky, a portion of it being above timber line, and it has neither springs nor streams of sufficient size or accessibility to be used for stock watering purposes. The grazing season lasts from June 15 to October 31, and during this period of four and a half months the animals do not get a drink.

Under such conditions, however, the sheep do extremely well, and the lambs from this range have an average weight at the close of the season of 68 pounds on the Chicago market, which is rather above the normal weight from that vicinity.

In one area on the Targhee forest in Idaho sheep get water only twice during the four months' summer grazing season. There is no water on the range, but the sheep are driven to a nearby stream lower down the mountain side.

SUCCESSFUL DAIRYING

Depends to Large Extent Upon Knowing Individual Worth of Cows

There are such excellent concrete examples now and again outcropping of men who prove that it pays to take up cow testing, that their records of success make stimulating reading for dairy farmers all over the Dominion.

Here is a good example of what one man at Cedar Hall, Quebec, in the Gaspe Peninsula, accomplished by carefully watching his fairly good cows and feeding them better. The first year his eight cows gave him 33,011 pounds of milk, an average of 4,126 pounds, at a feed cost of $32.50, making a total profit of $96.83, an average of $9.60 profit per cow. Two of the best cows in the herd the first year were lost accidentally, two heifers made up the herd to eight again; a pure bred sire is kept.

The next year his eight cows gave him [illegible] pounds of milk, an average of 5,176 pounds, or 1,050 pounds of an increase per cow. The feed cost $9.25 more per cow, but the total profit was $177.20, or an increase of [illegible] [illegible] the [illegible] pays to give additional feed if the cows kept are of the type to make use of it profitably.

The forcible realities are these: The gross [illegible] [illegible] increased by $122.63 from the same number of cows, the profit far more than doubled, and the owner has received every encouragement to try for still better results. That is where a trial cow testing trip generally lands the herd owner.

SLIDING TO FIRST QUITE LEGITIMATE

Big League Magnates Disagree With Ruling That Player Must Stay on His Feet

May a player slide into first base, instead of running past it. If he does, is he necessarily out? President Chivington, of the American Association says yes. He calls it an unwritten rule of baseball. The ruling by Chivington came as a result of an informal protest by Manager Friel, of St. Paul, against a ruling made by Umpire O'Brien, who called out Dixie Walker for sliding head first to the initial sack.

"There is no time gained by sliding, and in the case of first base, where the base-runner does not have to dodge a touch, the only reason for the slide is to raise a dust that will hide the play from the umpire," said Mr. Chivington.

Herrmann Disagrees

Commenting on the ruling, the Louisville Courier-Journal said:

"The statement given out by August Herrmann upholds the declaration made by this paper that a man who slides into first and beats the ball is no more out than the man who hits the ball to the fence. It is merely an unjust assumption of power by the official. President Chivington's contention that the umpires are right in calling out the player who slides into first base is ridiculous. Anybody who has run or played baseball knows that a leap when going at full speed will save time, and that the player who slides has a better chance to beat the ball. If Mr. Chivington is consistent, why not call the player safe when the first baseman slides into the bag in order to make a play? The baseman undoubtedly raises as much dust. Laying aside the question of whether the slide is advantageous, the rules are clear upon the point. Herrmann [illegible] the case [illegible] player is allowed to reach any base by running, walking, jumping or in any other manner as long as he remains within the lines prescribed. This is laid down in the rules of the game, and no umpire, president of a league or anyone else has any right to change that rule."

Mack Upholds Slide

Connie Mack, of the Athletics, also had something to say about the ruling.

"There is a lot to be said on both sides of the slide-to-first proposition," Mack declared. "The biggest thing in its favor is the fact that it undoubtedly prevents many collisions between the first baseman and the runner. A baseman may be drawn back upon the bag by a high throw or a bounce, and unless the runner, coming full speed down the path, slides into the bag, a headon collision is inevitable. I have seen a slide prevent smashes that might have had serious results innumerable times."

Asked whether or not he thought the slide to first saved time, Mack said he thought it did, possibly a fraction of a second, which in so many cases decided the result of a game. "As to the danger of spiking," he continued, "some players try to spike the baseman every time they slide into a bag, but clean players won't spike a man jumping into first base often enough to warrant a change in the rules. The danger of colliding with both players on their feet is the great one, it seems to me," said he, and he ought to know.

ETON "ALPINE" FEAT

Boy Fixes Hat on Lightning Conductor Above Buildings

High above the street, pierced by the lightning conductor on top of the Eton memorial buildings, Windsor, England, was visible a soft grey hat, a challenge and a defiance to the powers that be.

It was placed there by a boy who had first to attack the top of the massive dome, then to surmount a number of pillars and ornamental work, and finally at a dizzy height above the street to "shin up" the lightning conductor.

How the climb—which to the ordinary man looks an utterly impossible one—was accomplished remains a mystery.

A local builder was called in to remove the hat. He engaged the services of an expert climber, who with the aid of ladders and other appliances succeeded in getting it down amid the cheers of the boys—but the dare-devil boy who fixed it had no ladder for his 100 foot climb.

THE RUNNER SCORED BUT STILL WAS OUT

The Comedian of the Washington Team Tells of the Funniest Play He Ever Saw

I have heard many a funny baseball story, said Herman "Germany" Schaefer. "The funniest [illegible] in baseball" is a sporting writer who brought up the subject, but the funniest ever came directly under my own observation. The game was played in my bush league days, and it is just as well to leave out names and places.

The play that caused the mob scene happened in the 14th inning. We went to bat in the first half of the fourteenth, hoping to end the game, as darkness was approaching and it was evident that only one more inning could be played. Our first man up reached first, was sacrificed to second and took third on a passed ball. With only one out, it looked like a run.

The batter was a clever bunter and the manager signalled for a squeeze play. The pitcher had plenty of speed and threw a fast one over. Naturally the runner on third was off with the ball, the batter connected, and while the ball was in the air the runner slid over the plate. The batter hit the ball too hard and almost made a single over short.

The third baseman had raced in for a bunt, and, of course, was out of the play. It was evident, however, that the shortstop could make the catch.

As the runner who had crossed the plate got on his feet his teammates yelled to him to get back to third to prevent a double play. He started for third as if mad. The shortstop muffed the ball when the runner was about half way back. Seeing the error, the runner dashed for the plate again, but the throw retired him.

At this stage the mob scene was put on. No one seemed to know what had happened. Every player rushed at the umpire. The official kept his head and ruled that when the man on third touched the plate a run had been tallied and that everything that happened afterward was void. The decision being in our favor, we gracefully retired, but not so the home team.

They kicked long and loud, and the bleacherites, believing the umpire had made a terrible decision, rushed on the field. So did a few policemen. The umpire stood his ground and finally forfeited the game to us.

The play created all sorts of comment and the ruling of the umpire was upheld by the league president.

I know of no other case in baseball where a man actually scored, tried to go back to third and then tried to score again, only to be retired, the run being allowed.

BASEBALL IS CLEAN

Billy Sunday, the Evangelist, Has Fond Recollections of It

Everywhere I go I am asked: "Are you still interested in baseball?"

You might as well ask an old ex-fire horse, "Do you remember the sound of the gong?" said Billy Sunday, once a famous player, but of latter years a zealous and somewhat sensational evangelist.

Baseball is and always will be loved as long as it is kept clean and free from gamblers and crooks and from the taint of suspicion that it's not on the square. It is on the square, although some unprincipled men have tried to cast a cloud over the game.

I don't believe the game is any faster to-day than twenty years ago. I do not believe the players are any speedier than in the past. They have some new names for the same old stunts we pulled off in the days of Cap Anson, Mike Kelley, Buck Ewing, and others.

There are some fine pitchers in the game, but I will put old John Clarkson, Amos Rusie, or Charlie Radbourne up with any of the best ones of to-day. You will always [illegible] boosting the grand old game [illegible] me my start in this world and [illegible] not take a cold million for my experience on the diamond.

GASOLINE FUMES

The Gas Given off by This Popular Fuel Acts Like an Anesthetic

Gasoline fumes, in addition to being highly inflammable, are also poisonous to the human being. This fact has only recently been developed by medical authorities and it is possible that its discovery might have the effect of explaining some deaths that have been assigned as probably due to other causes. The fumes are poisonous under certain conditions and it is well to have these conditions thoroughly understood, else there may be more deaths from this cause. Combined with enough air there is little or no danger, but when a person is subjected to the influence of the fumes in a confined place the chances are that they will be affected in a way that might have fatal results. So far as their investigations have gone the chemists and medical men who have investigated gasoline poisoning have come to the conclusion that its effects are very much like being overcome with an anesthetic. The victim suddenly collapses and becomes unconscious. During the period when consciousness is lost the people behave very much as do people who have been subjected to ether as an anesthetic. Some of them fight and scream and some of them are perfectly still. As in the case of an anesthetic, the recovery is dependent on the individual. It is not often that there are any bad effects from it. However, in a number of cases that have occurred in Montreal, where the discovery of the poisonous nature of the fumes has been investigated, recovery has been prompt and the victims were able to return to work the next day. In all of these cases, however, restorative measures were commenced immediately on the man being overcome—the victims being men in these cases—so that there is no evidence of what the fumes will do if the person overcome by them is not given immediate attention. That is, there is no positive evidence so far as the Montreal authorities know. There have been cases where deaths occurred which, in light of this discovery that has been made, [illegible] safely be assigned to inhaling [illegible] fumes. One of these was the case of a man who was painting or cleaning the inside of a gasoline tank and was found dead. Another was the case of a chauffeur who was found dead in a garage where there was no ventilation and where the fumes of gasoline were very strong. It is pointed out that, in view of the universal custom of using gasoline as a cleaning material by women, it would be well to see that the room where it is used is well ventilated with a steady current of fresh air. There is no danger so long as the fumes are not confined—just as there is little or no danger of explosion when the gas is allowed to mingle freely with the air.

A RECORD STURGEON

One Fish Provided a Meal for 1,000 People

Very seldom indeed is the sturgeon, the finny monster which Edward II. made a Royal fish, and which, when caught in the Thames, becomes the property of the Crown, captured in English waters nowadays. For this reason not a little interest was aroused a few days ago when it was announced that a sturgeon 9 feet 9 inches in length, weighing 420 pounds, had been caught in the River Delph at Welney Washes, near Littleport, Norfolk. This fish, which according to the estimate of a salesman at Spitalfields, who ultimately sold it for £30, would provide a meal for nearly 1,000 people, had been noticed in the river, and attempts had been made to shoot it. But the cartridges used were loaded with shot too small to have any effect on the sturgeon's hard skin. A large net, therefore, was drawn across the river, after which a boat was rowed alongside the fish, when one of the men succeeded in forcing a large and powerful hook attached to a strong pole into his throat. This enabled him to keep its head out of water just long enough for the fish to be killed with a gun. Some idea of its size and weight may be gathered from the fact that five men were required to land it. This, however, is by no means the largest sturgeon which has been caught in English waters. The record was a fish weighing 460 pounds, while in the North Sea fish weighing as much as 562 pounds and 728 pounds have been captured by trawlers. It is pointed out that one of the most remarkable facts about the fish noticed in the North Sea is that they are similar to the American species, whence it would seem that the specimens caught from time to time in our waters must have made the voyage across the Atlantic, since the fish appears to have died out as a regular inhabitant of British waters. Sturgeons pass the greater part of the year in the sea, but periodically ascend large rivers, and it was due to this characteristic that the specimen was caught recently in the River Delph. Not only do they attain great size and weight, but, according to the estimates of some experts, they sometimes live as long as two hundred years. Apropos of the fact that Edward II. made the sturgeon a Royal fish, it is interesting to note that its flesh, quite apart from the fact that caviare is made from the roe, is always held in great estimation, and in olden days was [illegible] reserved for the table of the King.

RICHES OF MEXICO

Vast Storehouse of Mineral Wealth—That's Why It Attracts

"Mexico is the land of big stakes. Humboldt called it 'The treasure house of the world.' It is all that and more."

A man who has spent years of his life on the south of the Rio Grande, was talking and this was the burden of his talk.

He told of a subterranean lake of oil, known to be 300 miles long and from 15 to 30 miles wide, with a "gusher" that flowed more than 200,000 barrels in 24 hours before it was "capped" and regulated; of valleys filled with oil in that 24 hours.

He told of ore that assayed $36,000 to the ton, and hundreds of tons of it in sight.

"Under Spanish rule," said the man from Mexico, "the mines of Guanajuato alone produced over $1,000,000,000 worth of silver. The mine owners made millions so quickly that one of the Spanish viceroys was forced to issue an order forbidding them from scattering handfuls of silver on the streets because it increased the number of beggars.

"Well, it isn't very different now. For instance, there's Pedro Alvarado, the owner of the Palmillo mine. He is an ignorant Indian who has no idea how much money he has, nor any idea of its value. In the last few years he has built 80 churches, at least 100 schools, and has given away several fortunes. One Christmas Pedro Alvarado gave away $3,000,000 to the poor 'for the love of God,' he said.

"Why, there are lots of creeks or streams, particularly in Sonora, where a peon or a Chinaman can make from $5 to $10 a day washing for gold with an ordinary pan. They call these little streams 'poor man's banks.'"

DEVELOPING A SUPERMAN

Siberia Should Produce One if Eugenic Theory Counts For Anything

Siberia's unique population should possess considerable interest for the eugenists, says a well known medical journal. From 1853 until 1900, from 1,000 to 20,000 Russians were exiled annually to Siberia, mainly for voicing ideas and opinions which favored democracy and other modern theories; in other words, the inhabitants of the territory seem always to have been men and women of original habits of thought, of mental qualifications which would have made them prominent and distinguished under a form of government more like our own.

As we understand it, these exiles have lived an outdoor life, rigorous, perhaps, but of the most healthful kind. Consequently we find in Siberia a most unusual combination of intellectual equipment of high quality with physical surroundings adapted to furnish bodily vigor and excellent health, a union produced by accident of the exact kind that eugenists are striving to effect by design.

The colonization of Siberia by the method above referred to practically ceased more than a dozen years ago, there should be now, even in the absence of first rate schools, a population with most exceptional gifts, veritable supermen if the theories of the eugenists are soundly based.

SAFETY IN COAL MINES

Steam Will Dampen Dust and Prevent Explosions

The fact that dry bituminous coal dust will explode under certain conditions has been proved both by the experience of the past and by laboratory tests and is now generally admitted by all coal men.

That coal dust may be rendered inert by the proper application of moisture has been shown both by laboratory tests and by the absence of explosions at mines in which moisture is present in the proper proportion to the quantity of dust produced. The result of an investigation of the humidity of mine air, carried out by the Bureau of Mines, leads to the belief that steam may be applied to the intake air in such a way as to offer the most economical and efficient method of dampening coal dust.

The Arms of Glasgow

The explanation of the coat of arms of Glasgow is curious. On it are an oak tree with a bell hanging on one of its branches, a bird on the top of the tree, and a salmon, with a ring in its mouth, at the base. St. Kentigern, in the seventh century, took up his abode on the site of the present city of Glasgow. Upon an oak in the clearing he hung a bell to summon the savages to worship. Hence the oak and bell. A queen, having formed an attachment to a soldier, gave him a precious ring, which the King had given her. The King, aware of the fact, stole upon the soldier in sleep, abstracted the ring, threw it into the Clyde, and then asked the queen for it. The queen, in alarm, applied to St. Kentigern, who went to the Clyde, caught a salmon with the ring in its mouth, handed it to the queen, and was thus the means of restoring peace to the royal couple.

POLO PONIES SCARCE

Supply in England Not Equal to the Demand

Polo authorities in England are lamenting the shortness of first-class polo ponies, animals of quality and stamina, and urge the establishment of breeding establishments, especially in Ireland. They assert that polo ponies should prove a most profitable form of horse-breeding. In an appeal The Field says:

"The shortage of first-class ponies, animals of quality and stamina, suitably broken, or more perfectly prepared by scientific schooling, is abnormal, and there appears to be a great opening in the horse-breeding districts of Ireland for the further production of animals, for which the demand is everywhere considerably in advance of the supply. It has been proved beyond doubt that the polo pony may be produced by selection, and is no longer a chance-bred animal. Polo ponies should be the most profitable form of horse breeding, because they are naturally hardy, requiring a meagre fare, and come truer to type than any other species of the equine race. They gain their life registration certificate at four years old, and are a valuable commodity at that age."

CAMERAS SNAP FINISH

Races Judged Automatically When Winner Breaks Thread

Successful trials of an automatic photographic apparatus for judging races were conducted at Maisons-Laffitte, and the system may be put into general use on the French tracks. A camera is placed in line with the winning post, and the winning horse, by breaking a thread, releases the electrically controlled shutter of the camera, and a photograph of the finish is taken. The apparatus was tried in Belgium for horse racing, and was used in all the track events at the Olympic games at Stockholm, but there the photographs were chiefly used as additional evidence in case of a disagreement between the judges. One critic thinks this method can hardly be "successful" owing to the thread stretching before it breaks, and thus releasing the shutter when the horse is partly past the line. But this difficulty has long been known, and it is not impossible to overcome it. Muybridge, a pioneer photographer, [illegible]

Health First

In buying food articles we must consider several things—economy, results, convenience, reliability; but the most important is Health.

Health means everything. If one gets cheated in buying dresses, shoes or bonnets it is provoking, but the harm is chiefly loss of money. In buying food articles, if imitations or poor stuffs are supplied, there is a loss of money and probably an injury to health also; and good health is beyond price.

The Duty of Canadians at Home

The Canadians at Salisbury Plain are being trained and there is no better material in the world than the soldiers the Canadian people have sent to [illegible] army—our army. The Canadian troops can be depended upon to give a good account of themselves. In good time, they will go forward to do their share. Now what is our share?

The Canadian Patriotic Fund was established to care for—in case of need—the wives, families and dependent relatives of Canadian citizens in active service in the armies of Great Britain or her Allies. The government is [illegible] munitions of war, equipping the troops and is paying them from the time they leave our shores. The government will send contingents as long as the men will volunteer—because the British Government does not have to resort to conscription.

Let us see to it that in no family of a Canadian citizen who has gone to fight, there shall be suffering in his absence. Every man who has gone to fight in the armies of Great Britain or her Allies is fighting for you and for me. We are comfortable at home. For him, the cold, the wet, the trench, the hail of bullets, fatigue, sleepless nights, weary marches, suffering—for you and for me. We all can't go to war, but what can we do? If we can't enlist we can give. I say there is no more noble cause than this Canadian Patriotic Fund and I congratulate you on the high mark you have set before you in this splendid city of Peterboro. Let no man who has gone, feel any anxiety that those near and dear, are suffering from hunger or lack of shelter. Let us see that there will always be a roof over the little ones and bread on the table. From Hon. W. T. White's speech in the Grand Opera House last night.

The Peterborough Cereal Company made the fine subscription of one hundred bags of Reindeer flour, and rightly, which is quite right, that it be distributed by the committee for the benefit of families of soldiers who have gone to the war from Peterborough and vicinity. Still a few more are coming in. Mr. T. F. Matthews made a personal subscription of $200. The firm of Matthews-Blackwell Co., have done liberally in addition. The Matthews' employees have given the day's wage and the handsome result is nearly $300.

The Kaiser is Dead (?) According to Private Wire From Berlin to New York—Two More German Cruisers Reported Sunk by the British

TWO MORE GERMAN CRUISERS SUNK BY BRITISH FLEET IN ATLANTIC

Buenos Ayres Reports that Foe's Cruisers Nurnberg and Dresden Were Overtaken and Sent to the Bottom--This Completes Vice-Admiral Sir Frederick Sturdee's Victory off the Falkland Islands

Buenos Ayres, Dec. 10.— (Flash) — It is reported here that the German cruisers Nurnberg and Dresden, which escaped from Admiral Sturdee's squadron on Tuesday have been overtaken and sunk off the Brazilian coast.

The British fleet of Vice Admiral Sir Frederick Sturdee is reported to have completed its victory over the German fleet by overtaking and sinking the cruisers Nurnberg and Dresden. The report of this overtaking and destruction of the two remaining vessels of the German fleet was received here today in a wireless from Port Stanley.

All attempts to get further details of the engagement of Tuesday [illegible] ing through the Montevideo wireless station have failed. Montevideo is now unable to communicate with Pt. Stanley or get any confirmation of the brief statement that the Nurnberg and Dresden have been sunk.

The battle which resulted in the sinking of the German cruisers Scharnhorst, Gneisenau and Leipzig started in Argentine waters, but developed into a running fight which was carried into the high seas, and the German cruisers are reported to have gone down off the Falkland Islands.

The British losses, according to a wireless report, amounted to less than one hundred killed and wounded.

London, Dec. 10.—7.48 p.m.— The Official Bureau announced this afternoon that the German cruiser Nurnberg, one of the warships which escaped from the British in the engagement of Dec. 8, has been sunk.

The fate of the Dresden seems to be in doubt from an official standpoint.

GRAND JURY'S PRESENTMENT TO COUNTY JUDGE HUYCKE YESTERDAY

The following presentation was made this morning at the sitting of the county court by the grand jury to His Honor Judge Huycke:

May it please your Honor:

We, the grand jury for the county of Peterborough, beg leave to present as follows:

We, with your Honor, are pleased to note the general activities prevailing throughout the country in regard to the world-wide war being waged by Germany and her allies against universal freedom and religious and national liberty. In this connection we must congratulate the country upon having as its presiding judge a loyal gentleman in your own personality, ever to the front in defending the interests of the Empire against Teutonic aggression. In this connection your grand jury cannot let pass the opportunity of expressing its sentiments with regard to the supreme struggle now going on, and which is involving, with but few exceptions, all the nations of the world. Your Honor referred, and with justice, to the tremendous importance of present military and naval operations, on which hinges the fate of the British Empire. On its outcome rests the very existence of the British Empire and also that of our beloved Canada, together with all other colonies enjoying the protection of the Union Jack. We always have had, and at present are enjoying the protection of Britain's naval and military strength, and as a devoted daughter of a protecting mother we hold that bond of kinship very dear indeed. In this moment of Empire trial, we have the appreciated opportunity to prove our loyalty and give substantial assistance. This we are doing, and will continue to do. Our sons and brothers are already on the field of battle or moving to the front.

On Salisbury Plains we have Canada's thousands, all anxious to receive, honor, and maintain with the Motherland, the traditions of British citizenship. We know what faces us, should the allies fail, and our part shall be to send men, munitions, and sustenance to the uttermost extent of our ability. We call your Honor's attention to the movement now being waged in this city to raise a very large fund to be devoted to patriotic purposes, in assistance of wives and relatives of soldiers who have gone to the front to fight our battles. The effort being made is an honest one and promises to be successful. We trust that when your Honor again takes up his duties in this city, peace will have been restored and such a triumph peace as will assure to the whole world that for years to come war shall cease among civilized peoples.

Your jury highly appreciates the generous support the county of Peterborough is giving in this appalling war, and admire the splendid manner in which its people have given to the occasion in men, financial aid and other resources.

We are happy to note that but two criminal cases are on the docket which speaks well for the conservation of law and order within the county under your Honor's jurisdiction, and the active enforcement of the peace by the county officials in general.

We find the jail is ideal in its appointment, but we regret that there are confined with more inmates than usual. However, we realize that general conditions over which the county has no control must of necessity affect the jail's census.

As customary, year by year, your jury visited the various institutions within the county's jurisdiction, the House of Providence, the Protestant Home, the Children's Shelter, Nicholls Hospital and St. Joseph's Hospital. In all we found the most approved principles of conduction prevailing. In every one of the institutions visited the highest degree of efficiency obtains. It does seem to us that in these county institutions, the officials responsible give [illegible] opportunity for criticism or suggested improvements except that we recommended that the frame building in the court house yard be taken down and replaced by a brick structure.

With your Honor, we regret the loss by death, of the late county crown attorney, R.E. Wood, whose many official duties and citizenship won for him the respect and esteem of the community as a whole. And we would ask that the court extend to his bereaved family its earnest condolence. In this connection we are pleased to endorse the appointment of Mr. George W. Hatton, a gentleman in whom we are convinced the high responsibilities of the office are well placed.

Our sympathies go out to Sheriff Hall in his enforced absence through illness, and we sincerely hope that he will shortly be able to resume the duties he is so well qualified to discharge.

In conclusion, permit us to extend our acknowledgement of the many courtesies experienced at the hands of the officials of the several county institutions we inspected in the course of our duties as grand jurors, and to express our satisfaction at the healthy and progressive tone of the county and city on general principles, together with our heartfelt appreciation of your Honor's admirable administration of the responsible office with which you are so worthily invested.

Respectfully submitted,
MORLEY W. LYLE,
Foreman.

Rumored That Kaiser is Dead No Official Confirmation to Hand

New York, (Flash), Noon.— It is rumoured here that the Kaiser is dead, news to that effect having been received over a private wire from Berlin. There is absolutely no confirmation.

Paris, December 10.— Gains of from two hundred to six hundred yards along the French centre are reported today in the official communique issued from the war office. Along the Aisne and in the Champagne region artillery duels continue, with the advantage resting to the French, while in the Argonne continued progress is reported.

The official statement covering the operations of yesterday says calm prevailed on the Ninth in Belgium, and in the region of Arras. In the regions of Quesnoy and Andechy we made gains of from two hundred to six hundred yards, taking several trenches.

The French artillery in the Aisne and Champagne regions continue its advantage. Our progress in the Argonne continues. Additional trenches were taken in the Lepretre forest.

London, Dec. 10.—The German forces operating against Warsaw from the north have stormed and taken Prasnysz, situated fifty miles north of the Polish capital, and twenty-five miles beyond the East Prussian frontier.

On the western front the French and British continue to advance their lines against the Germans by sapping and mining. The French artillery proving superior to that of the enemy, forced the evacuation of numerous trenches while all along the lines the allies have strengthened their new positions, preparing for any counter attack that may be launched against them.

This represents the developments today as indicated in the official statements from various war offices. The Russian statement reports the repulse of German attacks along the line from the Vistula southward through Lowicz and Glovno. The Germans have made bitter night attacks in this region but with the search lights playing upon their ranks, have suffered enormous losses, reports from Petrograd state.

OBITUARY

DANIEL CUSHING

Peterborough has lost another of its pioneer citizens in the person of Daniel Cushing, 330 Sherbrooke St., whose death took place yesterday.

He was one of our earliest residents coming here from Ireland with his parents when only three years of age.

He was in his 69th year, and lived here for 65 years, where he followed landscape gardening as an occupation. Pneumonia was the cause of death.

The deceased leaves a wife, two sons and one daughter, John and Daniel, and Mary Ellen.

He was an active member of St. Peter's T.A.S.

The funeral will take place Saturday morning from his late residence, 330 Sherbrooke street, to the Roman Catholic cemetery, after service in St. Peter's Cathedral at 9 o'clock.

GREAT BRITAIN DEMONSTRATES SHE IS STILL MISTRESS OF SEA

Lord Fisher Credited With Planning the Naval Activities Which Have Proved so Disastrous to the German South Atlantic Fleet--British Sea Power Still Dominates the World--Dramatic Act of Retribution

London, Dec. 10.—Great Britain has reasserted herself and again assumed her position as mistress of the seas. This is the general view taken in London today as a result of the victory in the South Atlantic in which the German cruisers Scharnhorst, Gneisenau, and Leipzig were sunk by the squadron under the command of Vice-Admiral Sir Frederick Sturdee.

The Admiralty was overwhelmed today with demands for additional details of the victory and news of the cruisers Dresden and Nurnberg, which escaped during the engagement. There is every confidence in London that these vessels will be sunk, despite their speed.

Reports were circulated today that in addition to the three cruisers sent to the bottom, two others were badly damaged. There was no confirmation of this report from the Admiralty.

Credit to Lord Fisher

The Daily Chronicle naval expert says: "The crushing victory justifies our hope that the methods now employed by the Admiralty on the basis of their war experience and under the masterly direction of Lord Fisher, will before long, lay the remaining raiders by the heels. Their temporary immunity has depended upon certain resources, especially the abuse of the wireless telegraphy and the violation of the neutrality of the coastal States which must, as time goes on, be restricted within ever-narrowing limits.

The Daily News says: "The moral effect of this victory in the South Atlantic will carry, even to the least understanding or most skeptical mind, the conviction that the British sea power is as sure as ever, and maintained by men as valorous as those who created it.

"Whatever mistakes have been made earlier in the distribution of naval forces, have been corrected. Superior strategy prepared the victory and that strategy bears everywhere the imprint of Lord Fisher's genius.

"The big gun, coupled with speed, has once again vindicated itself. It has done so in every engagement of this war. It represents Lord Fisher's contribution, persistently criticised by many within and without the navy."

"A Dramatic Act of Retribution."

The Times' naval correspondent says: "The British naval victory avenges the loss of Admiral Cradock and his gallant comrades, and at the same time removes from the high seas the most important of the war vessels that Germany has had at large.

"It is a dramatic act of retribution, and indicates that when the correct strategical course is followed, the stroke falls hard and sure.

"It is impossible to believe that there was anything fortuitous in the arrival of this British squadron on the scene in which the German ships were found, but it has every sign of being the result of bold and thorough disposition on the part of the Admiralty.

"The presence of Admiral Sir Frederick Sturdee, who but a month ago held the position of Chief of Staff, and the completeness of the destruction of the enemy, are most significant circumstances."

EX-GERMAN CRUISER BRESLAU OPERATING AGAIN IN BLACK SEA

Petrograd, Dec. 9.—The German-Turkish cruiser Breslau is again operating in the Black Sea; the Breslau appeared off Sebastopol on Monday, it was officially announced today, and was driven off. The cruiser was attacked both by Russian cruisers in the harbor and aeroplanes, which endeavored to drop bombs on the hostile warship.

Christiania, Dec. 9.— The Nobel Peace Prize Committee today finally decided that no peace prize shall be awarded this year.

FOUR CZECHT REGIMENTS REVOLT ON THE FIELD OF BATTLE IN SERVIA

Geneva, via Paris, Dec. 10.— The correspondent of the Journal de Geneva at Prague, states that confirmation has been received there that four Czecht regiments which were serving against Servia, revolted on the battle field. The News, according to the correspondent, has created a deep impression in Vienna. The Servian legation at Rome makes public a report from the Servian headquarters to the effect that the Servian army has won a complete victory, resulting in the capture of the towns of Valjevo and Uzhitza in Servia, and the rout of two Austrian corps. The Austrians, says the report, abandoned everything—even their treasure chest.

CURE [illegible] SEASICKNESS

Important Discovery is Attributed to Dr. Fischer

Dr. Joseph Fischer, the well known [illegible] of Mannheim, in Munich medical weekly claims to have discovered [illegible] method whereby ocean voyages will lose their terrors. According to his reports on the result of extensive experiments with sea sick passengers he found that an injection of atropin completely cured the worst cases. During a trip to New York Dr. Fischer made experiments on the way across the ocean to endeavor, if possible to determine what sea sickness is and what causes it. He found that an injection of [illegible] produced the exact clinical symptoms of sea sickness, and that this was caused by an irritation of the [illegible] nerve. He then discovered that [illegible] injection of atropin paralyzed this [illegible] and all was well. Dr. J. H. Mistaken For Suffragettes

At Ballymena Petty Sessions reference was made to the recent scenes in the town when a number of lady canvassers were mistaken for suffragists and were mobbed in the streets, and when two lady visitors from Australia received similar unwelcome attention. Mr. Barclay, J.P., expressed keen disapproval of the conduct of the crowd, which, he said, was regretted by the respectable inhabitants of the town. Mr. Henry O'Hara, town clerk, said the scenes were mostly created by irresponsible girls, who followed these persons believing them to be suffragettes.

Oil Mining in Scotland

Mining for oil is peculiar to Scotland, for there are no oil wells in the Scottish field. The oil is not even liquid, but exists in a shale formation. This shale is almost as black as coal and lies at a depth of about 400 feet below the earth's surface. The oil shale is mined just as coal is mined, the rock is crushed into small pieces in crushing works similar to coal-breakers, and the crude oil is squeezed out of the small pieces of shale much as water is squeezed out of a sponge. One ton of shale yields an average of fourteen gallons of oil. The oil field in Scotland lies between Glasgow and Edinburgh, known as the West Calder field, and the deposits of oil-producing shale are said to be practically inexhaustible.

SPLENDID SPORT
IN FLYING BOATS

All the Thrills of the Automobile, Aeroplane and the Motorboat But Not Nearly So Much Danger

Year by year [illegible] flying is becoming [illegible] more as a sport than what was once called "the art." Although flying is yet in its infancy, it is [illegible] plain that the flying machine will become a strong competitor of the automobile and [illegible], if not more so, the flying boat, to any other kind of [illegible] pleasure craft. The landings from the aeroplane have not always been successful, but to alight with a flying boat after a flight is as easy as to guide a motor car to a standstill.

In the first recorded race of these craft, held on Long Island, the sight of three machines jockeying for position was inspiring, while the close finish of the return trip from the outer buoy would stir the blood of any sportsman.

Water flying is safe mainly because there is always a good place to alight. It is not necessary to guide the machine along a narrow course for starting or to pick one's ground in landing. The surface is smooth and level, and one may head in any direction with safety. Winds over the water are invariably much steadier than over land, and if, through carelessness or inexperience, the operator does make a bad landing, or plunges the boat at too steep an angle into the water, or strikes a wing too hard, the accident cannot be grave. The machine is not seriously damaged and the operator is none the worse, except for his "ducking."

The first development in water flying, the hydro-aeroplane, has these advantages, but the modern flying boat, with its large [illegible] has all the advantages of a [illegible] and a flying machine combined. It is as seaworthy as any motor boat of its size, and flies as well as any aeroplane of equal proportions.

Now that we have a safe system of flying, the development of aviation is sure and unlimited. For racing nothing can compare with the flying boat. There is the same chance to struggle for position as in yacht racing, and every opportunity for the airman to exhibit his skill in rounding the buoys and making his starts and landings. No prettier or more impressive sight can be seen than a fleet of flying boats rising from the water at the start of a race, or coming down the course "neck and neck" at the finish.

On the water, the flying boat is handled like an ordinary motor boat, although the controls resemble those of an automobile. The rudder is operated by a steering wheel, which also operates the device for elevating.

TAX ON RACING BETS

German Government Proposes to Legalize Making of Books

The "bookmaker question" is one which has long agitated German sporting circles. For the last thirty years bookmaking, according to the strict letter of the law, had been "verboten," like so many things in the Fatherland. Yet the "[illegible]" has contrived to run [illegible] and prosper to a fair extent.

Now the whole position is about to be changed. The Government has been considering the matter, and a bill has been drafted which will have the effect of giving State recognition to the bookmaker.

In Germany, as in France, the parimutuel system is in vogue, and the Government takes toll of the transactions of that machine to the extent of 16 2-3 per cent., and realizes about $7,000,000 annually therefrom.

Now it is proposed to reduce that tax to 12 per cent. Of that the State takes one-half, the other 6 per cent. going to the various Rennvereine, or racing associations, for the purposes of horse-breeding. The Government hopes that it will make no revenue by the decrease, as the bookmaker tax will preserve, and very possibly increase, the amount the State receives. As to the bookmaker, the bill providing for the recognition of a certain number in each large town, the figure to be fixed according to the population. He must pay a tax of 6 per cent. of his takings to the Government, and the Rennvereine will receive a small percentage of the winnings from the person betting. Small wins will be free from tax, which will afterwards rise as high as 10 per cent.

SUPERSTITIOUS CRICKETERS

Why cricketers should be superstitious is hard to say, but that the majority of them are very much so is a well known fact. Probably the most common belief in the cricketer's creed of superstition is that a bat which had made a good score can, if given a fair chance, repeat the performance. Hundreds of cricketers would give very large sums to possess themselves of a bat with which some famous batsman had knocked up a big score, and high prices have been offered for the bats of the leading cracks by amateurs who believed in the superstition.

Very frequently a batsman who discovers that he is unable to score with his own bat will borrow one with which some other man has made a big score. Another popular belief is that if a batsman places his pads on before the preceding batsman is out the bowler will almost invariably bowl him before he reaches double figures, and he will often ignore his captain's orders to be ready in that he refuses to put on his pads before he sees the retiring batsman well on his way to the pavilion.

Artful Ways to Serve Remnants of Poultry

By ANN MARIE LLOYD

THIS is the season of the year when poultry forms one of the staples on the [illegible] menu. Wherever there [illegible] for [illegible] there is sure to be some portion left over. Then it is served sliced cold with currant jelly, but even [illegible] families there may be still a surplus. Here are some ways of serving it.

If you have only a little turkey and chicken you can make a very [illegible] supper with club sandwiches for the main dish. For the sandwiches the toast should be quite half an inch in thickness, and not crisp, but fresh and hot and delicately brown. Good toast is the whole secret of success in these most delicious sandwiches.

Butter it lightly and lay on the thin slices of chicken or turkey. Cover with a crisp lettuce leaf and place some crisp broiled bacon on that. Add a bit of mayonnaise dressing, not too much of it, and complete with the other slice of toast. Serve at once on a hot plate with a bit of parsley for sprinkling.

When you start to make these sandwiches have everything at hand, for like souffles, they should be made and eaten without waiting.

It is well just to stir them about, but they must be thoroughly mixed with the meat and [illegible] turn the mixture in, cover with a greased paper and set in a pan of hot water and cook for one hour in a moderate oven.

Turn out very carefully, so as not to break, on a very hot platter and serve with [illegible] made as follows:

Add a tablespoonful of flour to one of melted butter, and when it bubbles stir in cup of rich milk or half milk and half cream, and stir till it thickens and is smooth. Season with salt, a dash of paprika and celery salt, and add half a cup of chopped mushrooms.

It is possible to make this dish of veal chopped fine, and only the [illegible] palate will know that it is not turkey.

When all is well heated add a cup of cream and the grated yolk of [illegible] This makes a thick rich soup, and is [illegible] the main dish for the children's supper.

Secrets of Health and Happiness

If You Bleed Easily, Taboo All Acid Fruits

By Dr. LEONARD KEENE HIRSHBERG

A. B., M. A., M. D. (Johns Hopkins).

Copyright, 1914, by [illegible]

OUR dog or blood [illegible] from your own [illegible] [illegible] with another. The sight of your own tears usually wash away [illegible] own bleeding, but the stains of another only sicken you.

Why is it that some people have a propensity to bleed excessively with every scratch? Medical pundits were formerly prone to teach that all who thus bleed freely upon slight provocation, inherit the weakness from an[illegible] ancestor.

"Hemophilia" is the name of this inherited malady. Nevertheless, it is not so common as the medical books might mislead you to believe. The strength and feebleness of the blood, it is true, are inherited. Many of the [illegible] hereditary powers or defects also appear temporarily.

Every heritage of the living body must appear as a beginning, some time or other. All history shows the power of blood, as well as agriculture shows the power of the seeds in the soil.

Twenty years ago Sir Almroth E. Wright, to whom so much honor is due for spreading the great gospel of preventing typhoid fever by vaccinating with murdered typhoid bacilli, called attention to the fact that many persons who were "bleeders" did not remember this tendency to hemorrhages from, as Mrs. Malaprop might say, "their posterity going backwards to their forefathers."

Vinegar Proves Injurious.

Sir Almroth proved that the acid salts of certain fruits and foods, if either taken in excess or administered as a medicine, would smother or dampen the [illegible] of the clotting power of the blood. [illegible] now, after a score of years, a public recognition of this truth. Now, for the first time, Dr. Bernard Myers, M. D., Edinburgh, M. R. C. P. London and Medical Registrar to the Royal Victoria Hospital, London, who agrees that many individuals who suffer with bleeding gums, nose bleeding and other ways to lose blood easily, hitherto put upon some ancient heritage, were quickly cured by forbidding them to eat grapes, oranges, pickles, lemon juice and other fruits.

"Persons who had been alleged to be hemophiliacs," [illegible] Dr. Myers in a technical monograph, "have been cured of their hemorrhages merely by taboo[illegible] vinegar, lemonade and orange juice."

Malt vinegar, grape juice, lemon juice, cider and various fruit juices were mixed with salt water, and, in some tests, with equal volumes of blood. Salt water and blood were also mixed. After an hour's time these mixtures were examined.

Lo and behold! In every vessel in which fresh blood was mixed with [illegible] the blood coagulated, but in all of the vessels in which fruit juices or vinegar had been added to the blood there was no sign of a clot!

Care Must Be Taken.

The [illegible] [illegible] salts and other foods [illegible] [illegible] "citric [illegible]"—the salt made in the soda fountain and drug store [illegible] citrate of [illegible] and in lemon juice; "tartaric [illegible]" present in [illegible] and baking powder; "malic acid"—found in [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] that a [illegible] of vinegar, [illegible] harmful that they are really a necessity. A vast quantity of them can, upon occasion, be well taken care of.

With those inclined to bleed at first blush it is another matter. Such hapless wights must needs use discretion; such must forever keep a sharp eye upon their commissariat. These should, perforce, keep all embalmed vinegars only for war times.

When the War is Over

Before returning home, Sir George Paish, the English financial expert, who has been in this country for several weeks on business, made the following statement in the press in regard to a possible means of recouping in times of peace some of the losses of the present war.

"England," he said, "has been spending about $400,000,000 annually for armaments and defence. When the war is over England will be able to reduce its annual expenditure on defenses, and in a few years the saving will repay us for the expenses now incurred. The policy of nations will be peaceful and not aggressive, and when this war ends militarism will have been suppressed in Europe."

This is a hopeful view to take of the situation, and no doubt something of the kind will have to be done, not only by Great Britain, but by France, and Russia. As a matter of fact a war of armaments has been in progress for twenty years in Europe. All the nations now engaged in war have been spending a great deal more money in supporting standing armies and building fleets than they could afford, hence the war is likely to end with all the nations financially exhausted, with the possible exception of Great Britain. It is quite probable that for a time at least smaller armies will be maintained, and less money will be spent on battleships, otherwise the nations will be hard put to pay the interest on their debts.

The Canal and Australian Trade

Even now, before the Panama Canal has been officially opened to world traffic, an indication of the influence it will have in the development of the same when it shall have been completed is supplied by the expressed desire of nations on the Pacific coast of South America, and some in the Far East, for closer trade relations.

There have been visitors to the United States from Chile and Peru whose services were engaged by their commercial bodies in behalf of measures for an increase of trade between North America and them, in addition to similar calls from Argentina, Uruguay, and other people of the Atlantic side of the Continent. The latest visitor, however, is from Australia, and his mission is to promote direct traffic with the peoples there.

This is Captain J. W. Neish, chief publicity officer of New South Wales, who sees the opportunity to be offered in that way by the completion of the canal. Instead of sending our goods thither by the way of the long and perilous voyage around Cape Horn, [illegible] bring theirs by way of England, thus necessitating the payment of extra middlemen's profits and freight charges, he suggests the direct interchange which the canal will allow.

He says Australia sells the United States over $10,000,000 worth of goods a year, and takes from us from $40,000,000 to $50,000,000 in return, and tells of the wool and tin and other Australian products we want, and also of the favorable consideration shown for his work in the many inquiries he has received from American merchants.

Every Stiff Joint Limbered, Rheumatism Cured

THAT OLD FAMILY REMEDY, "NERVILINE" IS GUARANTEED FOR THE WORST CASES

CURES NEURALGIA, BACKACHE, AND LUMBAGO

Rheumatism today is unnecessary. It is so well understood and so readily curable that every day we have reports of old chronics being freed of their tormentor.

"I can speak confidently of the Nerviline treatment, for the simple reason that it cured me," writes Albert B. Cornelius, from Kingston. "You can't imagine how stiff and lame and sore I was. Nights at a time I couldn't sleep well. I followed the Nerviline directions carefully—had it rubbed into the sore regions four or five times every day. Every rubbing helped to reduce the pain. The swelling went down. I got a fair measure of relief in a week. I also took two Ferrozone Tablets with my meals. They increased my appetite and spirits, purified my blood and toned up my system generally.

"I am as well to-day as a man could be—in perfect good health. I give Nerviline all the credit."

A large family size bottle of Nerviline costs only 50c., or the trial size 25c., and is useful in a hundred ills in the family. Whether it's toothache, earache, headache, neuralgia, lame back or a cold, Nerviline will cure just as readily as it will cure rheumatism. For family use nothing equals Nerviline.

Literary Doctors

The fact that the celebrated American physician, Dr. Silas Weir Mitchell who died recently at Philadelphia, had a distinct reputation in the literary world as a poet and novelist, calls to mind several other instances of relationship between pill and quill. Dr. Mitchell's best novel "Hugh Wynne Free Quaker," created almost as much interest as some of the stories of Sir Arthur Conan Doyle, who got his idea for "Sherlock Holmes" while walking the Edinburgh infirmary under the eye of that remarkable surgeon, Dr. Joseph Bell.

Another Scottish doctor, Dr. John Brown, was the immortal author of "Rab and His Friends." Ricardo Stephens, the author of "The Cruciform Mark" and "The Wooing of Grey Eyes," practises and writes in Brora, Sutherlandshire, in the heart of a deer forest.

Sir Frederick Treves, who achieved the highest eminence as a surgeon, has since become one of the most widely read authors of the day; while Sir Ronald Ross, who has done remarkable work in tropical diseases, acquired high repute for his writing on general scientific subjects.

Robert Bridges, the Poet Laureate, is a doctor; and among women doctors, Dr. Lilias Hamilton and Dr. Margaret Todd (Graham Travers) are both well known writers of fiction.

INTRODUCTION

The Glenaladale Silver Black Fox Company, Limited, was incorporated in 1912 with six pairs of foxes, at $90,000. This Company re-capitalized in 1914, with 20 pairs of beautiful Silver Black Foxes, at $15,000 per pair, making a total capitalization of $300,000.

THE FOXES

Six pairs (one year old) proven breeders, and fourteen pairs (1914 pups), making a total of 20 pairs—all young foxes—good for at least 20 years. This Company has bought some of this year's options on foxes with a guarantee that they are pelt-proof and of the highest strain and very best quality P. E. Island famous foxes.

THE RANCH

The ranch is situated on the well known Glenaladale Farm, owned by Major C. McKinnon, formerly the [illegible] of Sir William McDonald, and is only 12 miles from Charlottetown, in a quiet locality sufficiently removed from any disturbance.

THE RANCHER

Mr. Arthur V. McKinnon, our Ranch Manager, has had much experience in breeding foxes, and has the practical knowledge necessary to efficiently manage and care for the animals.

The foxes will be ranched free of charge to the Company for the first year. This means a large saving to the shareholders, as some companies have to pay as high as 25 per cent. of the increase for ranching purposes.

The promoters of this Company are retaining $[illegible] worth of stock for themselves. $[illegible] worth has already been disposed of, leaving $[illegible] to be offered to investors at $25.00 per share, with a guarantee that a dividend of 50 per cent. will be paid in cash in 1915, or whatever [illegible] it may be.

The Glenaladale Silver Black Fox Co., Limited, in 1913 guaranteed a dividend of [illegible] per cent. but are going to pay [illegible] per cent. in cash and [illegible] per cent., in stock in 1914. The Company is in good standing and to each and every investor the first of September, 1914, we can say—"We have given you [illegible] per cent. [illegible] than we promised." And we feel sure that in 1915 all the shareholders in this re-capitalized company will be able to say they received more than they were promised.

This Company can truthfully say that they have not one cent of watered stock in the Company. Now Mr. Investor, if you were a Company and we the shareholders, we would look to you for justice to give us all that was honestly due us. We would not like for you to buy 2 pairs of foxes at $15,000 per pair ($30,000) from a fox company and capitalize your concern at $[illegible] and make us pay, as shareholders, for it. The Glenaladale Silver Black Fox Company, Limited, will ask you to do nothing like that. We want to let you in on the ground floor.

NOTICE

When a fox company guarantees any specified dividend to its shareholders, and when said company is an incorporated body, you need not be afraid of any unfair play, for such company is compelled to pay what they promise, and, besides, every interest is taken for the welfare of both the investor and the company.

The promoters of this Company are all above board and will not permit any crook to come in and do anything that is not right. Anyone holding stock in this Company who is dissatisfied can, by notifying the Secretary-Treasurer, have his or her money promptly refunded.

FORTUNES IN FOXES

There is money in fox ranching more than anything else ever known. It is good for the rich man and good for the poor man. A poor man cannot buy a pair of Silver Black Foxes but he can easily raise $25.00, $50.00 or $100.00. By investing in this Company he gets back his money in at least two years and then he will have an income for life and for his children to come—and after these will be money in fox farming. One of the reasons for this is that P. E. Island has now 95 per cent. of the world's foxes in captivity. For every one pair that can be raised there are more than 25 wealthy people waiting for it in London, Russia, France and America.

PELT VALUES

The Fox Pelts have advanced greatly in price since 1910 and you can see for yourself what money was in them then.

Below are the particulars of sale of a consignment of Silver Fox Furs, shipped from Prince Edward Island ranches to London, England, and sold there in March, 1910:

SHARES

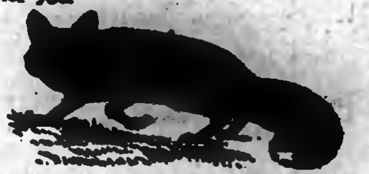
Shares are selling at $25.00 each, 25 per cent. with application and the balance on or before September 1st, 1914.

Simply fill out the application form and mail to Major C. McKinnon, Secretary-Treasurer, Glenaladale, P. E. I.

All cheques must be made payable to "The Glenaladale Silver Black Fox Co., Ltd."

A POINTER

Just to give you a little idea of what the free ranching of foxes means to the investor, we will figure it out for you.



We have twenty pairs of foxes in the ranch and suppose each pair produces a litter of only four pups, this is equal to 40 pairs and at $15,000 per pair it would figure out at $600,000. Now, if we had to pay even 15 per cent. of the increase for ranching purposes (which is considerably lower than some companies pay) it would mean that we would have to pay $90,000 for ranching expenses.

We ranch the foxes free for the first year, so that in addition to a guaranteed dividend of 50 per cent., we save you this large outlay of money. While we guarantee 50 per cent., should each pair in our ranch produce four pups it would mean that your dividend would be about 200 per cent. instead of 50 per cent.

FINAL WORD

A great deal has been written about Ranches, Grades of Foxes, etc., but after all the one thing that every investor should keep before him is the dividend he is going to get. We have tried to show you in plain [illegible] what we can do for you and now that you have our proposition, compare it with the offer made by any other company now in existence, and judge for yourself [illegible] by some of the Charlottetown newspapers.

MAN OF MANY CREEDS

Bankrupt's Remarkable Confessions in the Bankruptcy Court

How a former undergraduate of St. Catharine's College, Cambridge, in turn embraced the tenets of the Church of England, the Roman Catholic faith, the Presbyterian, and the Baptists was related at the Cambridge Bankruptcy Court at the examination of Christopher Stanley Long.

He admitted that he had twice entered the Roman Catholic Church, and had also preached a sermon in a Presbyterian church, and had had sermons printed. He opened a banking account at Bournemouth with $250 given him by a lady with whom he had been travelling. He withdrew all the money, but afterwards cashed a cheque for $75 on that account. He expected to receive a loan from a gentleman in Cheshire whom he had met at an hotel, but it did not come.

With the money he went to Switzerland, and stayed at the Royal Hotel, Lucerne, for six or seven weeks. There he went under the name of Carlyle, doctor of philosophy.

In Switzerland he cashed another cheque for $150 on his overdrawn account in England. Under the name of Dr. Angus he borrowed $100 from a lady to whom he represented that he was writing a book on Christian archæology for the Yale University Press, and wanted to visit the Holy Land. He wrote later confessing the whole thing was a fabrication.

For a time he masqueraded in Gloucestershire as Father Bernard, of the Order of the Divine Redeemer, and had numerous papers printed. But no such order existed. He was starting the society. At Cambridge, after pawning his landlady's ring, he agreed to buy it and pay her during the following term.

FOREST GIVES UP, SECRET

Balloon, Supposed to be Andree's Discovered by Eskimos

A newspaper story from Gothenburg reports a discovery which is believed to be connected with the ill-fated scientist, Andrée, who started seventeen years ago in a balloon to try and reach the North Pole.

The report stated: "The Swedish Minister of Foreign Affairs has received a despatch from the Swedish Legation at St. Petersburg, reporting that a telegram has been received from Yakutsk to the effect that parts of an old balloon have been found in a forest in Eastern Siberia.

"They are supposed to be the remains of the balloon in which Andrée started from Spitzbergen for the North Pole in July, 1897."

Andrée set out with two companions from Dane Island, in a balloon of great size, and, save for a message flung out some hours later that they were proceeding N.E. at an altitude of 800 feet, they were never heard of again.

From time to time reports have been received of the discovery of Andrée's balloon, but none has been authenticated. One of the most circumstantial stories came through a German missionary, who in 1800 reported that he had chanced on a tribe of unknown Eskimos from the farthest north. They told him that some years previously a "white house" came from the sky to the earth, containing two half-starved white men. Although carefully fed on reindeer meat they died from weakness.

The Eskimos added that they used the "white house" as a storeroom, and still had with them several ropes. A tour was arranged by the missionary to search for the balloon, but nothing further has been heard of the incident. Nine years previously a report came to hand that Andrée was killed by natives.

In 1908 a half-caste Eskimo captain of a fishing boat declared that on the shore of North Labrador he found a cross marked "Andrée," with a grave containing a body and a box of papers. He declined to say what became of the latter. Swedish explorers discredited the report that Andrée could have reached Labrador, and, moreover, it was pointed out that "Andreas" was a common name among Eskimos.

GERMAN DIVORCES

Eleven Thousand Granted in a Single Year

According to official statistics just issued there has been a great increase in the number of divorces granted in Germany. The figures for 1913 are 11,163, as against 6,707 in 1912, and 9,783 in 1911. The number of divorces granted has grown steadily since 1901, the increase up to date being 133 per cent. The latest figures show that there are 147 divorces for every 100,000 marriages. Of the 11,163 divorces decreed last year, 8,995 applied to people living in towns and 2,167 to country people.

It was Keats who said, "A thing of beauty is a joy for ever."

"Man proposes, but God disposes," was first written by Thomas a Kempis.

We are indebted to Colley Cibber, not to Shakespeare, for "Richard is himself again."

The poet Campbell found that "Coming events cast their shadows before," and "'Tis distance lends enchantment to the view."

To Dr. Johnson belongs "A good hater," and to Macintosh, in 1791, the phrase, often attributed to John Randolph, "Wise and masterly inactivity."

World's Busiest Depot

During the twenty-four hours no fewer than 1,120 trains pass through the [illegible] Station, London, and each one stops there. That is absolutely a world's record.

On the district railway section alone as many as forty-four trains an hour are run on a single set of rails. When it is borne in mind that every train slows down to enter the station, stops a brief period, and takes a few seconds to get up speed again, repeating the same process less than half a mile further on, it will be realized not only that the service must be run with clockwork regularity, but that such a volume of traffic could be handled at all if the [illegible] of the seconds had not been elevated into an art.

The London underground service is, in fact, almost the only one, if not the only one, in the world whose time table is based not on minutes but on seconds.

Fire at a Wake

At a wake at Bootle, the coffin containing the body of a child which was lying in the back bedroom of a house in Campbell street, with several lighted candles near, was burned through the curtains being blown against the candles and becoming ignited. The fire brigade was called, and soon extinguished the flames. The body was only slightly affected.

Pearl Fishing in River

A party of Englishmen have picked up pearls in the River Moy, near Swinford, county Mayo, which are estimated to be worth over $5,000. The country people had found pearls in the river previously, but were unaware of their value. One of them showed a specimen he had for seven years in his possession to an Englishman, and the latter immediately gave him $25 for it.

"THE NEW BABY"

Coddling and Cuddling the Little Ones is Forbidden

Teased fathers and tortured mothers and testy aunts met together under the auspices of the "Duty and Discipline Movement" to combat "slackness, softness, indifference, and indulgence" in their various baby relatives. The chief discussion of the day centred round the problem of producing babies who do not cry. The disciplinarians of the "movement" are convinced that it can be done.

The Duty and Discipline Movement has produced quantities of pamphlets which are translated for the benefit of the Burmese. The Burmese are much more responsive than we are in our "ridiculous sentimental excesses," as one speaker called ordinary maternal kindness. So they are the recipients of such pamphlets as "That Rebel, My Daughter" or "The Practice of Punishment."

Nursery drill is one of the "disciplines" advocated by the movement. "Cot-coddling and cuddling" is to be abolished. "There is no occasion for babies to cry," said an octogenarian, and added that crying was a source of unhappiness to babies. "Non-crying children recover from their illnesses" is the eugenic maxim which the Duty and Discipline Movement is trying to spread among parents.

ROYAL PICTURE SHOW

Movies May be Established in Buckingham Palace

The keen interest which the Royal Family have of late displayed in connection with cinematograph entertainments is likely to result in private picture palaces being established at Buckingham Palace and Windsor Castle. Arrangements are at the present time being made for providing the Royal palaces with appliances of their own, in order to permit of films being shown at short notice.

ZOO SNAKE BITE

Keeper's Escape From Rattlesnake Which He Was Transferring

An under-keeper at the Zoological Gardens in transferring a newly arrived rattlesnake from its travelling box to a cage temporarily exposed his hand and was bitten on two fingers. After efficient first aid by the "Zoo" officials the man was removed to the Middlesex Hospital. But active measures were taken to minimize shock and keep up his vitality, and in less than ten days he was able to leave for a convalescent home.

It is supposed that the venomous snake failed to inject more than a small proportion of the usual dose of poison, because where the bite is successful the victim usually succumbs in less than a quarter of an hour.

The official returns for Ireland show that in the last six months there was a decrease in emigration of 5,000, this applying to each province, Ulster leading with 2,000.

THE STRAIGHT EDGE

One of the most difficult problems in practical mechanics is to make a straight edge. How difficult it is may be judged from an incident that occurred in the shop of a celebrated astronomical instrument maker.

A patron asked what would be the price of "a perfect straight edge of glass thirty-six inches long."

"It cannot be made perfect," said the instrument maker; "but it could probably be made with a limit of error amounting to only a fraction of a wave length of light."

"How much would that cost?"

"About $40,000."

It turned out that the customer wanted the straight edge for a carpenter, and that an error of one sixty-fourth of an inch would not bother him.

THE ICEBERG DANGER

New Devices for Warning Ship of Approaching Danger

Since the terrible Titanic disaster, scientists and engineers have devoted much time and attention to devising means by which ships may detect the vicinity of icebergs. The old method consisted of lowering a thermometer into the water when the iceberg zone was being approached, the distance of the icebergs being judged according to the temperature of the water in the vicinity.

Since the increase in the speed of big liners, however, this method has been found to be quite inadequate, being neither safe, quick, nor accurate. One of the most valuable methods for detecting icebergs at sea [illegible] is that of Dr. Coplans, of the University of Leeds, who invented an apparatus which detects the presence of icebergs by giving readings of the saline contents of the water. The nearer an iceberg is to the ship the less is the amount of salt held in solution in the water. The Canadian Government assisted Dr. Coplans in his investigations.

[illegible] high hopes are entertained in what is known as the microthermometer, an instrument enabling very much closer readings of the temperature of the water to be obtained than is possible with an ordinary thermometer. It is also self-recording.

Submarine signalling, too, for the prevention of disasters in foggy weather, is also being closely studied by experts, for it is recognized that there is much room for improvement in the signalling apparatus used at the present time on board ship.

The modern system of submarine signalling consisted of bells sunk to at least 20 feet of water operated by electricity or pneumatic or hydraulic pressure. It is said that a submarine bell can be heard at a greater distance than any fog-horn, siren, or any other generally used air signal or device, and it is recorded that one of these bells was heard at a distance of [illegible] fifteen miles.

The receiving apparatus is very simple, consisting of two cast-iron tanks, which are placed below the water-line on either side of the ship's bows and in contact with the shell of the ship. In each tank is the microphone, which is connected by an electric telephone system with the bridge. There the navigating officer has telephone receivers and switches which enable him to listen on either side of the ship. If he alters the course of the ship on hearing the bell so that the intensity of the sound is equal on both sides of the ship then the bell lies straight in front, and according to the intensity of the various sounds he is able to avoid danger.

ROLL SAMPLE CASE

Samples Take up Little Room and do not Become Mussed

An ingenious case for dress goods and other fabric samples has been designed. It rolls up closely and makes a compact bundle, yet the samples are not wrinkled or mussed in the process. A long piece of flexible material has a series of narrow straps removably attached at intervals along its inner surface. A number of clips form simple attaching elements, and these are removably secured to the straps. The clips, for example, are run through a bunch of fabrics and hooked onto the straps. The bunches are mounted in the case in transverse rows, with room enough between them to permit of the free and smooth rolling of the strip without wrinkling or creasing the goods. If the salesman desires to remove any particular bunch of samples for closer inspection he can do it—and replace it—instantly.

THE RIGHT WAY TO STRIKE A MATCH.

Once in a while we have complaints about matches breaking in two. This is not the fault of the match, as EDDY'S MATCHES are made from specially selected straight-grained wood only. For the benefit of those who are still in ignorance of the proper way to hold a match (and there are many) we give the following rule:—

"The forefinger of the right hand should be placed"
"over the tip of the match and withdrawn quickly"
"when the flame comes. This prevents any undue"
"leverage on the match, and instinct prevents one"
"getting ones finger burned."

JOCKEYS HORSES HATE

While Some Horses [illegible] at Post [illegible] Make Meal of Riders

Trouble in the paddock and at the post before a big race is frequently caused by a horse which has taken a sudden and violent dislike to his jockey, and there are numerous cases of well known jockeys being nearly mauled to death by their opponents.

One of the worst cases of "savaging" occurred to Otto Madden, the famous jockey, at Brighton races a few years ago. He was riding down to the starting post for the Worthing Plate, when a horse called Marigold IV. overtook him, dragged him out of the saddle by the shoulder, and, seizing him by the throat, shook him as a terrier shakes a rat.

The jockey of Marigold IV., who had himself been unseated, used his whip freely on the horse's head to make him release Madden, and other jockeys coming to his assistance, Marigold IV. was eventually beaten off, but not before Madden had been severely wounded.

Diamond Jubilee, the horse which won King Edward his first Derby, took a violent dislike to his jockey, Mornington Cannon. If Cannon ever went near his loose box, or the horse saw him in the stableyard or paddock, he would make frantic efforts to "go for him," and Cannon had several very close shaves from being badly mauled.

Fred Archer once had a bad tussle with a horse which tried to "savage" him, but the famous jockey succeeded in getting the better of the animal and won the race. The horse was Peter and the race was the Hunt Cup.

Peter threw Archer in the paddock before the race, and, seizing him by the arm, nearly bit it in two. Archer succeeded in beating him off, whereupon he threw himself down on the ground and screamed, lashing out at every one who came near him. Archer, however, was not to be daunted, and he eventually succeeded in mastering the brute.

Lord Charles Cunninghame, a well known sportsman who used to race on a large scale in India, had a very valuable racing pony which took a violent dislike to the "syces," or native grooms.

He absolutely [illegible] to come into his stable, and on one occasion [illegible] the "syces" [illegible] to groom him [illegible] completely at the elbow, while the other only escaped with a badly lacerated ear. After that white stable boys from England had to be specially imported to look after him.

Vedas, who became "savage" through ill-health [illegible] was paid extra to look after him.

Ladas, Lord Rosebery's famous race horse, was perfectly quiet under ordinary circumstances, but for some unknown reason [illegible] great dislike for [illegible] "them" if any members of the [illegible] approached his paddock.—Pearson's Weekly.

BUILDING CUP CHASERS

Some of the Rules Yacht Designers Must Bear in Mind

The conditions governing the America Cup yacht races give designers lots of latitude. According to the measurement rule, length is measured, but this length is taken in such a way as to limit overhangs and should the length be greater than the rule allows the excess is penalized. Draught is limited to 16 per cent. of the load water line plus 1.75 so that the limit of draught for a yacht 75 feet on the water line is 13.75 feet. Any excess is added to length. Then to find the rating after the length has been determined length is multiplied by the square root of the sail area and this product is divided by the cube root of the displacement. The larger the displacement, consequently, the larger the sail area that can be carried and the designer decides just how big a yacht he wants to build, making its form as easy as possible, and then figures out the driving power. It has been figured that the average defender measures about 162 feet over all, 14 feet draft, and spreads 7,000 square feet of canvas.

Steel Railroad Cars

Steel is rapidly displacing wood in the construction of railroad cars—not only in passenger cars, where the safety of the passenger is an important consideration, but in freight cars as well. The entire end is made of a single piece of steel, compressed with concentric annular corrugations, making a very strong and durable end wall. No posts, braces or rivets are required in this end piece.

FORTUNE SPENT FOR DOZEN PLAYERS

Some of It Was Real Money, But at Any Rate the Prices Were Record Breakers

A baseball statistician has completed figures to show that $144,000 was spent by major league clubs for a dozen players in the past few years. It doesn't seem so very long ago when the sporting world was agog over the announcement that $15,000 was paid for Donat Meekin and "Duke" Farrell by the New York club. And the $10,000 paid for the "King" Mike Kelly was thought to be a figure that would never in all the world be approached.

But big figures seem to talk these days. The [illegible] for "big priced" ball players, or the lottery, as it might be called, started when John McGraw paid $11,000 for "Rube" Marquard. For two years "Rube" was hardly worth [illegible] expenses. But [illegible] and he lived up to his price.

Then along came Barney Dreyfus with his $22,500 beauty, Marty O'Toole, and his $7,000 "Gilbert," Bill Kelly. That's "high," and it's probably going to stay right there. The nearest approach to it was when Charles Comiskey of the Chicago White Sox was reported to have paid $18,000 for Outfielder Chappelle. Other "big prices" were [illegible] including $15,000 the Giants were supposed to have paid for "Rube" Schauer, $6,000 the Yankees gave for Marty McHale, and the $12,000 the same club handed over for Thirdbaseman Fritz Maisel.

In these transactions, or in the majority of them, there has been more or less work of the imaginary kind. No such amount of cash as $10,000, $15,000 or the like was ever turned over for any player. The club getting the young star very probably handed over players who were figured at [illegible] real [illegible] through money in the bargain.

However, here is a list of the players whose combined abilities are reputed to be worth $144,500 in the [illegible]:

Marty O'Toole, Pittsburgh	$22,500
Larry Chappelle, White Sox	18,000
Rube Schauer, Giants	15,000
Ray Schalk, White Sox	15,000
[illegible]	12,500
[illegible], White Sox	12,000
Fred Maisel, Yankees	12,000
Rube Marquard, Giants	11,000
Elmer Brown, [illegible]	7,000
Bill Kelly, Pittsburgh	7,000
[illegible]	6,500
McHale, Yankees	6,000
Total	$144,500

GOOD PINCH HITTING

On a Few Occasions It Has Saved [illegible] Games

It is seldom that an emergency hitter shatters a pitcher's bid for a nohit game as Larry McLean, of the Giants, did when batting against George Tyler, of the Braves. The [illegible] to the Major League was on July 28, 1909. Lefty Pastorius, of the Superbas, then was pitching against the Phillies, and he held them hitless until the ninth. Then Billy Murray, manager of the Quakers, lifted John Titus out of the controversy and delegated Dr. Lena Martel to bat for him. Martel responded with a single, and Pastorius did not get his passport into the pitchers' Hall of Fame.

Eddie Barger, of the Naps, was headed toward a no-hit game on Sept. 25, 1907, while pitching against the Yankees, until Clarke Griffith requested Norman Elberfeld to bat for Jack Chesbro in the ninth. Elberfeld made a single and Barger's chance was gone. That same season, on May 20, Tom [illegible] had a similar [illegible] Harry Beals of the Naps [illegible] pinch hitter [illegible] in the third inning.

On Sept. 16, 1907, Joe Doyle of the Yankees confined the Nationals to one safety, made by Mike Kahoe, who got into the game because Jack Warner had been injured.

The only National League contest in which both teams were held to one hit took place between Pittsburg and Chicago on the morning of July 4, 1906. Lefty Leifield and Mordecai Brown were the pitchers and the safeties were made by Jim Slagle and by Leifield himself.

Charley Ferguson of the Phillies, so far as is known, the only National League pitcher to hurl two one-hit games in succession.

[illegible] the Course

During a discussion over long driving, Harry Vardon, the noted English golfer, gave views on the subject which differed materially from those generally entertained. He said:

"There are any number of golfers who hit at times very long balls, but where do they land? Nine times out of ten, you will find them in the rough. That is not the long ball in my way of thinking. When I drive I do not try to hit the ball as hard as I can, rather [illegible] The long ball [illegible] length and direction [illegible] the man who goes [illegible] the course [illegible] than average length, and I will [illegible] in the world who brings up in the rough."

HEROES OF SHAFT AT NIAGARA PLANT

Remarkable Feat of Four Men Who Stopped Flood in Tunnel

Three electrical workers went in a year down through a raging torrent that choked a power company's tunnel along the mighty cliff that holds up the weight of Niagara Falls. Three men with three boxes of dynamite groped their way in pitch blackness through a circular chamber swirling with water in order to blast out ten tons of rock lodged unexpectedly in the tunnel's "mouth." They failed. And then what? A few days later they did what mortal men have done neither before nor since; they climbed up the face of Niagara Falls from the outside, crawled under the curtain of water that leaps out from the giant cliffs and placed a charge of dynamite in the mouth of the tunnel. That time they were successful. The channel was cleared without the loss of a life. Here is the [illegible] by one of the men:

"Although we were dressed in oilskins, oil hats and rubber boots, we were quickly drenched to the bones by gusts of spray that tumbled on our heads and backs like pails of buckshot. So great became the force of [illegible] and crawled from [illegible] hands and knees. All this time we were creeping literally under Niagara Falls, for the cataract [illegible] slightly beyond [illegible] giving us [illegible] of water [illegible] direct against [illegible] fall.

"We were walking about a hundred feet up from the pool, bracing ourselves against the pile of rock. It was, at first, an almost impossible task to make steady progress. So we kept some distance apart for safety's sake in the event of one having a tumble, and by taking our positions patiently at every downpour and our way, we finally reached the ledge directly under the tunnel's mouth. It was a matter of a few minutes to place the dynamite and [illegible] where they would hit the blockade to best advantage.

"We rested a few minutes and commenced the return journey. But as the approach had been, the going back was infinitely worse. The adverse winds had gradually [illegible] us by walls of water and indeed at one time the prospect was [illegible] a twenty-four-hour stay at the [illegible] an ugly tavern.

"During a lull we [illegible] to [illegible] the [illegible] but we [illegible] and [illegible] sometimes [illegible] blood, until the sight of the Cave of the Winds [illegible] the blinding [illegible] our steps, and a [illegible] of a day. I remember once one throwing us a rope and we clutched at it with a sudden return of energy [illegible] safely into the [illegible] superintendent [illegible] wires. A [illegible] even above the [illegible] of the falls—and we turned to face a [illegible] after [illegible] the telephone [illegible] in the tunnel. 'It is rapidly lowering,' said he, and all of us knew that the blockade had been broken by the blast."

WILLIAM SULZER

William Sulzer who was impeached from the Governorship of New York State was born to be a politician and a leader of men. He had an uphill fight all along the way, but by either genius or good luck never has been shelved. His father, Thos. Sulzer, was a politician before him, so much so that he suffered imprisonment for a cause he believed in. The elder Sulzer was a German patriot and a comrade of General Sigel and General Schurz. He was a strong advocate of constitutional liberty and while a student at Heidelberg University joined the patriots in a revolution. He was captured and imprisoned, but through clever maneuvring managed to escape to Switzerland. He came to this continent immediately and soon cast his lot with the Democratic forces. This was in 1852. The elder Sulzer married soon after he arrived here and settled in Elizabeth, N.J. His wife was from Dutch and Scotch-Irish stock. They lived in the New Jersey city for several years, and there William Sulzer was born. Soon afterward they removed to New York, and young Sulzer, who was exceedingly bright as a boy, was sent to the Public schools and was graduated, despite the fact that it cost many a hard effort and sacrifice on the part of his father and mother. Afterward he was sent to Columbia University, where he studied law. Both in the Public school and at college he was recognized as a forcible speaker. As early as 1884 when Mr. Sulzer was but twenty-one years old, he attracted attention as a masterly orator.

Market for Flax Fibre

As a considerable quantity of flax is harvested in Canada every year the attention of those interested may be drawn to the market in Leeds, England, for flax fibre. Spinners there have followed with close attention the development of the growth of the flax plant in Western Canada, and are desirous of receiving shipments of the fibre if it can be obtained on competitive terms with supplies from other sources. Some three years ago a few small trial shipments of the rippled flax fibre were sent from Canada. Mr. J. M. Mussen, Canadian trade commissioner at Leeds says one concern express their readiness to give their consideration to offers that may be received at any time from Canadian firms interested in finding export markets for this fibre.

SUN'S RAYS WARM MERE SKIN OF EARTH

It Takes Six Months For Midsummer Heat to Penetrate to Its Full Extent

How far does the heat of the summer's sun penetrate into the ground? Probably not one person in ten will give a answer that is even approximately correct. Their replies generally vary from one inch to many hundreds of feet, says London Tit-Bits. Actually the distance is about 3 feet. Beyond this depth the temperature of the soil does not vary appreciably from hour to hour, let the midday be never so hot and the midnight never so cold. At this depth the mean temperature in the summer is about 50 degrees Fahrenheit, and in the winter about [illegible] degrees.

And the annual difference? That is to say, the depth at which there is some difference between the summer temperature and that of the winter. Well, at a depth of 60 feet it is impossible to record any change due to the changing seasons over head. Go down only 30 feet, and it is [illegible] Below [illegible] feet [illegible] definite amount [illegible].

The surface heat takes a long while to penetrate downwards. In fact, curiously enough, the change in temperature [illegible] six months to reach the end of its [illegible] journey. [illegible] the [illegible] surface [illegible] the [illegible] winter 25 feet to [illegible] feet deep, and vice versa.

Farmers talk about "cold" soils and "warm" soils. This, although it sounds improbable to those who have never had anything to do with the land, is an actual fact.

Everybody knows that black clothes are hotter to wear when a hot summer's sun is shining than white ones. The reason for this is that black and other dark colors absorb heat, while white and the lighter shades reflect it. And this applies to soils equally with clothes.

[illegible] Some soils [illegible] are a darker color and literally warmer than their lighter neighbors. Peaty soils, some of which are nearly black, others a rich dark brown, are the warmest; light-colored clays and sands the coldest. There may be as much as [illegible] degrees [illegible] between the temperatures of two soils lying next each other and upon the same day.

Last Saturday he insisted on doing the family marketing. At noon he proudly displayed a beautifully plumaged turkey for which "I only paid $1.60." His wife, after dinner remarked "I wish dear you would pluck that bird as I've got company coming." After two hours the insurance man emerged from the cellar with his face covered by sweat and turkey feathers. In his hand was the shorn body of a bird that he [illegible] a dyspeptic chicken. After this, "Mrs. Insurance Agent will do the marketing.

NEW YORK HERALD

SUNDAY, DEC. 12.

The pages of the Magazine Section of the New York Herald of Dec. 12, are tinged with the joyous spirit of the holiday season. The front cover is by Ethel Plummer, whose spirited and artistic sketches are well known. Miss Plummer joined the gay, busy throng of Christmas shoppers, and her sketches of the incidents that came to her notice make an effective and amusing page.

Touched also with the bright spirit of Xmas is "The Red Flower of Courage," an article which tells the story of poinsettia, crimson flower of war, which, through an odd combination of circumstances, has come to be recognized as an official flower at the celebration of the anniversary of the birth of the Prince of Peace. The story of its origin and importation into the United States by Joel Roberts Poinsett, whose grand nephew, George Poinsett, lost his life at Vera Cruz, forms a unique Christmas page.

The "War in Art" page will present reproductions of two famous war masterpieces, "Cossacks of the Ataman," and "Tel-El-Kebir," by Detaille.

Dolly Dip, the dance sprite, who made her debut on November 30, has an interesting adventure with three daring burglars, and Lenora explains her valuable shopping system, which she passes on in the hope that it may solve many puzzling Xmas problems.

There will also appear the twelve-page fashion magazine. This Fashion Magazine is distinctive, novel and valuable.

GERMANS HAVE RELAXED EFFORTS IN THE WEST

Paris, Dec. 9.—Advancing along La Bassee canal, the allied forces are today endeavoring to push forward in this region in a general movement to gain control of the important highway from Bethune to Lille, Lens and Arras. The German resistance in this section is reported to have been greatly weakened by the heavy withdrawals of troops which have been sent to the eastern front, or distributed along other points of the western line threatened in the past week.

Paris, Dec. 9.—Artillery duels extend all over the entire line from the sea to the River Lys and along the Aisne, and French advances made in Argonne are reported in the official communique from the War Office today. The French artillery had the advantage over the Germans in the Aisne region. In the Argonne the Germans [illegible] in dynamiting a trench, [illegible] the advantage rested with the French.

Berlin, via The Hague, Dec. 9.—The condition of Kaiser Wilhelm who is suffering from bronchial catarrh, was declared to be satisfactory today. There is no intimation of when he might return to the front. An additional details are received of the recent German success in the Lodz region. It is believed Field Marshal Von Hindenburg will be shown as having gained a victory of great importance. The German offensive here is no wise slackened in this region but owing to the numerical strength of the Russians the pursuit of the retreating forces is being conducted with utmost caution. The situation in the west is declared to be entirely satisfactory.

It is evident from the above despatch that the Germans fear a heavy flank attack from the Russians between Lodz and Warsaw.

Petrograd, Dec. 9.—An official communication given out by the Russian general staff last night says: "The battle which began December 5, southeast of Cracow, in the region of Wieliczka on the River Dunajec has developed in our favour after having courageously forced the passage of the Dunajetz river in the vicinity of Nowy-Sandec our reinforcements pursued the offensive and inflicted serious defeat on the German troops, which had followed the Valley of Lapanow. The German right wing, which was pursued was turned."

SUBMARINE IS A TERROR NO LONGER

Washington, Dec. 9.—From Admiral Fletcher hero of Vera Cruz the House Naval committee today heard the submarine terror riddled. He declared that Europe's war has not shown this weapon a decisive one and asserted that a "skilful enemy" need not give this weapon the opportunity to wreak havoc. He told that, though spectacular and affecting, the imagination of the world, the submarine is still lacking in the power to determine a conflict. He declared battleships will still remain the deciding factors of war.

Fletcher considered New York with its fortifications, plus mines, immune from a hostile attack. He said: "As yet no lesson can be drawn from the European war to show that the value of the battleship is any less than before or that it is not the main weapon to decide a conflict in any navy."

THE PENALTY FOR TREASON IS DEATH

London, Dec. 9.— Nicholas Ahlers, former German consul in Sunderland borough, was today convicted by the Durham assizes of high treason, and sentenced to death.

THE REAL TEST

There is no surer test of the real success of the management of a Life Company than the feeling of its clients, the policyholders, towards it.

How the Canada Life Stands the Test

The Company is constantly receiving letters expressing gratification for increasing policy dividends, appreciation of generous treatment by the management, or grateful thanks for prompt payment of claims.

In Illustration

A CHICAGO BANK PRESIDENT lately wrote: "This dividend is particularly gratifying . . . and reflects great credit on the management of your good Company."

SIR WILLIAM WHYTE'S EXECUTOR wrote: "I have to thank you very cordially for the promptitude with which you settled our claim."

A PHILADELPHIA POLICYHOLDER says: "Your methods seem to make a friend of a policyholder, and I assure you that after dealing with your company fifteen years or more, I feel enthusiastic of your worth and kind treatment."

These letters are not exceptional; they are typical of those being received nearly every day.

BANK OF MONTREAL

Annual General Meeting, Held 7th December, 1914.

The 97th annual general meeting of the shareholders of the Bank of Montreal was held in the Board Room of the head office of the Bank on Monday, Dec. 7th.

The meeting was marked by complete addresses by Mr. H. V. Meredith, the President, and Sir Frederick Williams-Taylor, the General Manager.

PRESIDENT'S ADDRESS

In moving the adoption of the annual statement, Mr. H. V. Meredith, the President, said:

The statements presented to you will, I trust, be received with satisfaction.

While profits show a diminution compared with those of the preceding year, the shrinkage is mainly attributable to the fact that during the world-wide disturbed financial conditions which have existed, we deemed it prudent to forego the profit on a portion of our liquid reserves ordinarily carried abroad and having a earning power. These we transferred to our vaults to provide against every possible contingency, and to support, if required, the general financial situation in Canada.

I feel sure this course of action will meet with your approval.

The year, I need hardly say, has been an eventful and anxious one.

POSITION IN GREAT BRITAIN

In Great Britain the period immediately antecedent to the declaration of war was marked by considerable ease in the money market, coupled with a slight recession in trade, following a long period of unrest and depression caused by the Balkan chaos and other adverse factors.

The outbreak of hostilities brought about the collapse of the whole financial fabric, the closing of the bourses and a world-wide financial cataclysm. For a time at least a condition well nigh general insolvency was threatened. The steps which were taken to cope with the crisis are of too recent occurrence to require recitation.

Britain's command of the sea was undoubtedly the chief factor in bringing about a recovery of confidence, but great credit is due to the government and their able financial advisers for their bold and statesmanlike views of the situation and their prompt action in meeting the crisis, as well as to the Bank of England for the courage and activity with which the plans of the government were carried out.

The great latent wealth of the Empire has been demonstrated by the patriotic response to the recent government loan, and this is being followed by the removal of barriers to trade which is now once more approaching a normal condition.

What the consequences of the war will be must depend, I think, to a large extent on the duration of hostilities.

Whether a long period of depression and economy, in order to replace the wasted wealth of the world will follow its conclusion, whether the removal of political apprehensions and the prospect of a long era of peace will bring about an immediate restoration of prices—not alone of commodities, but of stock exchange and of other securities—it would be idle at the moment to predict.

In either event, all borrowing countries, including Canada, must expect their facilities to be largely curtailed while the wastage of war is being repaired.

IN THE UNITED STATES.

In the United States, the revival of business which has begun to be perceptible met with an abrupt check upon the declaration of war, and in consequence of the cutting off of supplies of European capital, plans for development either deferred or abandoned. were either deferred or abandoned.

Notwithstanding that the Western sections have reaped more than usually bountiful crops, the tendency there, as elsewhere, is toward general curtailment and the avoidance of capital expenditure.

These conditions do not appear to result so much from an absence of resources or unsound trade as from doubts and uncertainties touching the future, affecting corporate bodies as well as all classes of the community. This distrust will no doubt, gradually disappear and conditions right themselves in time. The increased prices, together with shipments of grain and food stuffs, and the large sale of war materials are having a stimulating effect on business generally, and gradually offsetting the adverse balance of trade.

There appears to be a growing feeling in favour of giving some measure of relief to the railways by way of increased freight rates so that they may be the better enabled to negotiate securities to meet their present needs and to provide for necessary expansion.

The coming into force of the Federal Reserve Banks operations should cause an easing money market until commercial activity absorbs the free funds created thereby, and it will likely prove a potent factor in restoring normal conditions throughout the country, as well as preventing those periodical crises which have been so disturbing in the past.

The opening of the exchange has helped to relieve an acute cotton situation. It has also been further considerably eased by the declaration that [illegible] will not be considered contraband. The operations of the New York stock exchange are gradually being extended and the fact of its now having been opened, even with restrictions, has had a good sentimental effect upon the whole financial situation.

POSITION IN CANADA

In Canada, a period of several years of remarkable growth and progress was accomplished by large—and in some cases imprudent—capital expenditures by industrial, municipal and other corporations, and an ambitious programme of railway construction, made possible by the ease with which money could be obtained.

These conditions were taken advantage of by company promoters and speculators to bring about unduly inflated and fictitious values, and the extent to which these were carried directed suspicion and distrust of our economic position in the money markets of the world, followed by a close scrutiny of our securities and a curtailment of money supplies so essential to our development.

The ensuing check caused embarrassment in some instances, but had a salutary effect on the country in general, as it brought us to realize the fact that unproductive expenditure must of necessity cease for a while, and our efforts be directed towards development of natural resources, accelerated by a large flow of immigration.

It fortunately happened that for over a year previously our manufacturers and merchants, preparing for such a contingency, had entered upon a period of curtailment and readjustment; and our economic position had been approaching a more normal condition. They were, therefore, the better able to meet the shrinkage in their turnover, occasioned first by restricted demands and now by the war.

A reference to these somewhat trite matters [illegible] the halt in business [illegible] experienced may create in the public mind a more gloomy view than is warranted by actual conditions. It is well to remember that for a decade the commercial expansion of Canada was really abnormal.

A decline in the foreign trade of the country had set in before the outbreak of war, and has been accentuated by that event. In the seven months ending October 31st last, the value of merchandise imported exclusive of specie, was $[illegible], or $[illegible] less than in the corresponding period of the preceding year. On the other hand the value of Canadian produce exported has been fairly well maintained, having been for the seven months $[illegible] as compared with $[illegible] a year ago. The adverse balance of trade has, therefore, been reduced from $145,000,000 to $[illegible] in this period, a substantial improvement of $[illegible], the more satisfactory in view of the practical closing of the London money market to Canadian loans. The transportation interests of Canada have also been benefitted by an increase in the value of exports of United States products through our ports from $19,000,000 in the seven months period of 1913 to $41,000,000 this year.

LEGITIMATE BUSINESS SOUND.

I am glad to be able to say that from the reports which reach me from all parts of the country, legitimate business is fundamentally sound. While trade generally is quiet, and in many branches restricted, especially those dependent upon construction work, there is compensation, in a measure, by activities in others which provide the vast supplies required by the war.

A general suspension of new undertakings is apparent. Agriculture—the backbone of the country—continues to prosper, notwithstanding a shorter crop yield, owing to the high prices being paid for grain and other farm products. The great increase in the number and value of live stock in the Northwest is especially gratifying.

Farmers are preparing to increase the acreage of land under crop, and manufacturers are taking advantage of the situation to extend their sales where foreign competition, for the time being, has been eliminated. There is, moreover, an undiminished confidence in the future which is an asset of no little importance.

Considerable unemployment exists, but the extent of it is probably overestimated and I think our position in that respect will compare favorably with that of other countries.

These conditions are overshadowed by [illegible] war so [illegible] that even yet many of us [illegible] the full significance of it all. [illegible] conditions and new problems had to be met.

GOVERNMENT'S WISE COURSE

The wise and timely action of the Finance Minister in providing facilities for rediscount, and in making Bank Notes legal tender, had a steadying effect throughout the country, and has enabled the Banks [illegible] to meet the legitimate demand of business and to keep in hand ample resources against deposits.

Power was taken by the Government to declare a moratorium, but fortunately it has not been necessary to put this into effect, for all must recognize the supreme consideration of maintaining our credit in the money markets of the world.

The war, by closing the financial markets of all countries, has precluded us from obtaining capital for construction and development work, and so long as these conditions prevail it will be necessary for us to conserve our resources rather than proceed with other than unavoidable capital expenditure.

The financial fallacy of issuing inflated currency for such purpose—abundantly proved by experience of other countries—is well known, and Canada is to be congratulated on having avoided the mistake of a depreciating paper currency.

In this connection I may remind you there is a homely adage that "no one has yet succeeded in lifting himself by his boot straps."

Nor should it be forgotten that we have a large foreign interest indebtedness to be liquidated by exports or new borrowings.

For the present, the London market being [illegible] available, we shall have to rely [illegible] on such facilities as the United States market can offer, and in a measure upon our own resources to solve the problem of restricted trade.

HOW SHE DISCARDED UNSIGHTLY COMPLEXION

[illegible] I exclaimed as I beheld my ugly complexion in the mirror: "If I only could tear off this old skin!" And do you know, I've learned how to do that very thing. Not to remove the entire skin of a sudden, that would be too [illegible] and painful, too. I [illegible]. The worn-out cuticle comes off in such tiny particles, and so gradually—requiring about ten days to complete the transformation—it doesn't hurt a bit. Day by day the beautiful complexion underneath comes forth. Marvelous! No matter how muddy, rough, blotchy, or [illegible] your complexion, you can surely discard it by this simple process. Just get an ounce of ordinary mercolized wax at your druggist, apply nightly like cold cream, washing it off mornings.

My wrinkles I got rid of by an equally simple method. By dissolving an ounce of powdered [illegible] in a half pint witch hazel, and bathing my face in the solution every day, [illegible] completely disappeared. [illegible]—Edna [illegible] in "Town Tattler."

The Allies Make Substantial Gains Along the Whole Battle Line

Paris, Dec. 11.—Further progress of the allied troops along the entire line of more than 350 miles, with the exception of in the region of Ypres, is reported today in the official communique. About Ypres the Germans made three desperate attacks yesterday. At one point they actually reached the French trenches, but were repulsed after desperate fighting.

Further advance and the repulse of the German attacks in the Argonne is reported, while along practically the entire line the German artillery has been active but unable to overcome the advantage of the French guns. This statement declares.

"On December 10, the French repulsed three German attacks in the region of Ypres. The Germans reached the trenches at one point, but were driven off. The French are progressing elsewhere. There were artillery duels in the regions of Arras and also Juvencourt. We made further advances in the Argonne where the attacks of the enemy were also repulsed. In the region of Verdun the German artillery was active, but harmless. Our progress in the Le Pretre region has been accentuated. The French troops took Aspach depot."

London, Dec. 12.—The Times prints a letter from an officer aboard H. M. S. Glasgow, dated November 6, giving a vivid narrative of the naval fight off the Chilean coast. Describing the search of the British squadron up and down the coast for the enemy's war ships, the writer says that although they could not locate them, "we heard their secret and friendly wireless stations talking in code." Coming to the battle itself, the writer says everybody was remarkably cool, as if at practice. "I cannot understand the miracle of our deliverance.—None will ever. We were struck at the water line by in all five shells out of about six hundred directed at us, but strangely enough not in vulnerable places, our coal saving us on three occasions. We were not armoured and should not be in battle line against an armoured cruiser."

GERMAN CRUISER KARLSRUHE IS LISTED FOR CAPTURE OR DESTRUCTION

Speedy Warship Gets Away, But is Helpless Owing to Loss of Auxiliaries--German Cruiser Dresden is Also Sunk--Naval Victory of the Falkland Islands Was Complete--British Fleets Will Soon Sweep the Seas of German Raiders

Buenos Ayres, Dec. 11.—Additional reports of the engagement off the Falkland Islands received here today state that the British fleet includes the second cruiser squadron attached to the home fleet, composed of the Cruisers Shannon, Achilles, Cochrane and Natal. The sinking of the German cruiser Nurnberg was run down after a chase; she refused to surrender and fought gallantly until she sank. The Dresden met a similar fate eight hours later. The main engagement off the Falkland Islands lasted for five hours.

The German reports declare that Admiral Von Spee and the officers of the fleet realized from the first that they faced certain destruction when they saw that they had been caught between the Japanese and the British fleet. The Germans immediately spread out and prepared to fight to the last man. The Nurnberg and the Dresden being light cruisers and the swiftest vessels of the German fleet, managed to keep up a running fight for several hours.

The cruiser Karlsruhe and the converted cruiser Kron Prinz Wilhelm, which were in the vicinity, have fled.

The British fleet, according to the latest reports, have captured the crews and sunk the colliers and supply ships which were serving these cruisers. If these reports received by wireless are true, it is expected that the Karlsruhe and the Kron Prinz Wilhelm as well as the Prinz Eitel Friedrich, will soon be rounded up by the British as [illegible] deprived of auxiliaries the cruisers will soon be rendered helpless owing to a shortage of coal and supplies.

"THERE ARE TRAITORS IN OUR MIDST" SAID ST. CATHARINES JUDGE YESTERDAY

St. Catharines, Dec. 11.—"There are traitors in our midst and they should be severely dealt with," was the emphatic declaration of Judge Carman from the bench today during a lull in the court proceedings, to a room full of jurors and spectators.

"There are many men about that are worth watching," he said, after tracing the growth of the war spirit in Germany. "Great Britain should be more severe with the men who are flying the Union Jack in the day and under cover of darkness are holding secret meetings and discussing the interests of Germany. We do not like to hear the penalty—hanging or shooting—but it is what they deserve. We should get our blood up and put an end to it. Beware of the man who would suggest the separation of Canada from Great Britain. Universal peace will never come until all nations learn that it is the duty of the strong to protect the weak as Britain has always done."

IMPRINT OF BLOODY HAND IS THE ONLY CLUE TO WHITBY MURDERER

Toronto, Dec. 11.—An imprint in blood, of the thumb of a man's left hand is the only clue the authorities have to the murder of William Stone, Jr., the young night telegraph operator at Whitby Junction Station on the Grand Trunk Railway, thirty miles east of Toronto. Stone was shot by some unknown person while he was alone on duty at the station between midnight and one o'clock this morning. At about 12.35 o'clock Leslie Cormack, the central telephone operator in Whitby, answering a call from the station was told by Stone that he had been shot and then the message ceased. Chief of Police McGrotty was informed and when he arrived at the station found Stone's dead body lying on the floor and one hand clutched the telephone receiver. The till had not been robbed and there was no evidence that anything had been taken by the murderer. There was no sign of a scuffle having taken place and the assassin had got clear away, but there was the marks of a bloody hand on a desk and by these the police hope to trace the slayer.

SUSPECTS IN CUSTODY

An alarm was sent out broadcast and when the Toronto police received [illegible] Detectives [illegible] and Montgomery [illegible] a freight train which had been [illegible] to East Toronto to shunting at Whitby Junction during the time the murder was committed. The officers boarded the train and located two young men who said they were brothers named Cecil and Albert Connors, aged 17 and 21 years respectively. A number of cartridges were found in Cecil's possession and the two men were locked up on a charge of vagrancy. The police are reticent in regard to any statements made by the prisoners when they were placed under arrest beyond stating that they said they had beaten their way from Oshawa.

NO SIGN OF ROBBERY.

There was nothing about the office to indicate that there had been any struggle and there is mystery as to what could be the motive for the murder. If it was robbery it is strange that the money in the ticket drawer was not touched. About $60, the amount which would ordinarily be there was found in the till and the drawer was locked. It bore no marks to suggest that even an attempt had been made to open it. One theory is that robbery was intended, but that the assassin became alarmed right after the shooting when Stone rushed to the telephone.

The splendid efforts of the local committee in charge of the Patriotic Fund have been crowned with signal, nay, unexpected success. Contributions ranged from Mr. [illegible] Waddell's splendid gift of $[illegible] down to the lowly gift of three cents by a little English girl living in the South Ward. Generations of Fighters

For sixteen generations back the ancestors of Mr. G. W. F. Price, of the City Architect's Department, Toronto, have been soldiers, and as one of the present war broke out Col. Price, only son of Mr. Price, volunteered for service. He is a member of the [illegible] Highlanders.

HUNTING MONARCHS OF THE JUNGLE

Sport Fraught With Many Dangers—Thrilling Experiences of Some Noted Hunters

A writer in "Answers" recounts some thrilling experiences of big game hunters, and speaks of Mr. C. Selous as a hunter who had survived a hundred close brushes with death, having spent one thrilling night with five lions prowling around his frail shelter of saplings. Three of the lions he shot, with the blast of their hot breath in his very face, in a crowded and glorious five minutes. But he has never had a narrower escape than when a wounded elephant charged him near the Umtali River.

In vain he spurred his horse; the poor beast was too worn out to gallop. Mr. Selous heard two blood-curdling screams over his head. "All's up!" he thought, and then the tusk of the elephant crashed with terrific force into his horse's rear, and he was dashed to the ground.

At the Point of Death

"Although stunned by the fall," he says, "I felt that I was unhurt; but the smell of the elephant was very strong. And no wonder, for the huge animal was kneeling on me!

"Fortunately, I was thrown under its body. Had I been in front of the forelegs I should never have lived to tell the tale. I wrenched myself loose, wriggled out from underneath, and escaped into the bush, with no more damage than a bruised eye and a stiff neck."

A still more thrilling experience was that of Mr. Greenfield, in Somaliland, just a score of years ago, when he was charged by a wounded lion. A couple of barrels fired in his face failed to check the lion; and Mr. Greenfield says, "over we went together. He had seized my left hand, and, pinning me down with a paw on my chest, began to chew at my arm. Then he made a grab at my stomach, and when I managed to turn over on my face I felt his claws go into my back."

Although Mr. Greenfield's arm was broken in two places he never felt the slightest pain. All that he felt, he tells us, was the lion's hot breath on his face, and the blood pouring from his arm on to his thigh. Fortunately, at this critical moment, a well-aimed shot from one of his men killed the monster.

Shot While in Air

Lord Hindlip never looked death more closely in the face than one day in 1904, when hunting in British East Africa. A wounded lioness [illegible] charging through the long grass.

"Waiting until she was within a few feet," he says, "I fired and jumped aside. As I did so, her body hit me, and I found myself, stunned and dazed, sitting up several yards away, wondering if my last shot had been successful. It had; for, several yards behind where I had stood, I saw the lioness biting the grass in her last death struggle."

When hunting in Somaliland, Captain George Campbell was similarly bowled over by a wounded and charging lion, and the next thing he knew was that the lion was lying across his legs, pinning him down, his huge head resting on his lap. An instant later the captain's head boy, Kalladieh, rushed up, seated himself astride the animal's back, and flung his arms tightly round his neck."

Luckily for both the lion was already dying, and while Kalladieh was imploring his master not to fire lest he should be hit, "his Majesty gave in, lowered his head, and passed peacefully away."

Major F. G. Jackson, the celebrated Arctic explorer, still recalls, with a reminiscent shudder, his encounter with a wounded bear in Franz-Josef Land. "With a fearful roar," he says, "the bear rushed on me, his huge jaws gaping wide; his warm breath was on my face, his cruel fangs glinted in the dim light.

In the Rifle's Flash

"Half-blinded by the flash of the rifle in the darkness, I thrust the barrel with all my force down the animal's throat."

He plunged his left hand into the bear's mouth up to the wrist; the sharp teeth deeply bit into it; he reeled under the shock of the collision. Drawing back his rifle, he was about to make a second thrust when to his amazement and delight, the bear, who had clearly had enough, turned sharply round, and made his way swiftly to the water, crashing his way through the ice, and swimming to the safety of a distant floe.

TIMING BOXING MATCHES

Mechanical Device Does it Accurately and Rings Bell Itself

A mechanical device to keep time in prize fights and indicate the number of rounds has been invented by a jeweler.

This timer will do away with the shortening or lengthening of rounds to favor a fighter—something that has been done in the past.

The timer is a large dial with four figures as indicated by the drawing. The hand occupies a minute moving from one figure to another, and a bell rings every time it reaches the nought and the figure three.

Above the nought a large number appears, changing with each round, so the spectators can say at a glance which round is being contested.

A CORK CLOTHES-PEG

It protects the Garment and Does Not Let It Slip off

Using a nail instead of a hook for hanging clothing has a decided disadvantage because cloth is liable to be torn by the sharp, rough head of the nail. If a long cork or one or two short corks are driven on the nail before it is put in the wall or closet door, the clothes will be protected and the nail hanger or peg will give as good service as a more expensive hook.

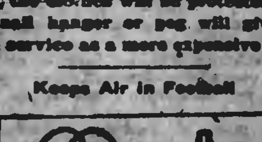
Keeps Air in Football



If you have trouble keeping your football filled with air, here's a thing that might help you. The leakage is probably caused by your failure to tie a proper knot in the cord over the outlet valve of the inner rubber ball. Or if there is an automatic valve it may leak and a knotted string over the end would help. Make one loop with a cord and then another just like it, as shown in Fig. 1. Pass the end of the cord under the first loop and then pull both ends. The knot will never become loosened until you loosen it. The way to make this knot was held as a prized secret for many years by a famous English footballer.

Is the American Boy a Spineless "Sissy"?

By Winifred Black

Copyright, 1914, by Newspaper Feature Service, Inc.

Winifred Black

REAR ADMIRAL Somebody-or-Other says that the American boy is going to the bow wows.

"The American boy," declares the rear admiral, "is a sissy. He's nervous, emotional, imaginative, sentimental, and everything else that a woman should be and a man should not. He doesn't want to fight—he wants to arbitrate. He isn't interested in politics—he's interested in art. He's not crazy about polo, but he's daft over music. He's a sissy, and a nobody—and it's the women who've done it.

"The American boy is brought up by women. His mother and his nurse look after him when he's little, and [illegible] school teacher look after him [illegible] he's older. By the time he's [illegible] [illegible] looks after him, and he never gets the [illegible] of it at all.

"We're going to be a nation of [illegible] [illegible]. Look at the Germans. They're the most [illegible] nation in the world, and it's because German boys are brought up and educated by German men.

"What we need in this country is a little German education and a little German discipline. The women are spoiling the American boy."

Avast there, admiral! and shiver your timbers! What a terrible storm you're raising, to be sure.

Men of Courage Differ.

I wonder how much there is in what you say.

I'm afraid the German idea of masculinity and courage isn't quite the same as ours, rear admiral. Of course, we may be wrong and the Germans may be right; but you'll have to convince us of that before we admit it.

"He doesn't want to fight, he wants to arbitrate." Starboard ho! What an indictment!

How [illegible] the man of today is—in the [illegible] or in the [illegible], or to [illegible] of two [illegible] [illegible] up and down the black [illegible] by [illegible].

"He isn't interested in politics, he's interested in art." Now that's really serious, admiral.

A great picture is a good thing, to be sure. But what sort of a fool can a man be who cares more for a Rubens or a Titian than he does about who's running for alderman in the first ward, and whether Dinny the Dink put it over on Jimmy the Duck in the second precinct or not?

Daft over music is he? Well, he always has been, admiral; only when you were a boy you probably played "Turkey in the Straw" on a mouth organ, or got the hired man to teach you "Old Dan Tucker" on the jews-harp, and the young man in your station of life today can tell a sonata from a fugue and isn't ashamed of it.

And when you talk about sissies, admiral dear, did you ever know that most of the fine tapestries in Europe were embroidered by the knights who were the great fighters of the time?

Tut, tut, admiral! today there and think [illegible] a bit before you say so much about them.

Men and women are just as different as apples and peaches—and they always will be, from the skin to the core. And not all the teaching in the world will make a sissy out of a real boy, any more than all the coaching on earth can turn a sweet girl into a real tomboy.

What Women Teach Men.

Women can learn from men frankness, simplicity, the regard for the great things of life, in place of the little things.

And men can learn from women charity, kindness and courage.

No, that's not a slip of the typewriter. Courage is the very word I [illegible] and please spell it with every letter in it, Mr. Printer, and you [illegible] [illegible] it in capitals if you want to. The average woman is so much more courageous than the average man that it's a joke to even guess about it.

[illegible]

I know girl reporters who [illegible] out to the north to the other, and they go everywhere at all hours of the day and night with no protection but a lead pencil and a hat-pin. And they never think of either of those weapons at all unless they [illegible].

For real, pure, [illegible] I'm afraid the American girl beats the American boy to what it is [illegible] not quite euphonious to call "a frazzle."

It isn't the woman teacher that make the American boys timid, if they are timid, rear admiral.

Don't worry about the American boy, admiral. He's all right, and so is the American man—and it's the American woman who helps just a little bit to make him so.

FORGET SELF IN NATURE STUDY

"Most of Us Suffer from Ingrowing Vision," Says Prima Donna.

"MOST of us suffer from in-growing vision," remarked Fritzi Scheff, apropos of nothing, as she [illegible] with a wonderful cloth of [illegible] and peeped at the world from beneath the brim of an eye-obscuring Paris hat [illegible]

"A [illegible] sort of thing," [illegible] cryptic response. "But perhaps specifically the fact that our thoughts and our [illegible] words and actions are so [illegible] with the ego. We see others in our own way, through eyes filled with the self-view.

"We intrude the eternal 'I' into every word we speak, every thought we think, and every act we do. It is foolish and narrowing and tiresome. Why should I say your opinions and your actions are peculiar just because they don't happen to agree with mine? And why should [illegible] I am [illegible] and a [illegible] [illegible] I do and say things you [illegible]? Yet, isn't that [illegible] [illegible] every one in the world is [illegible].

"How often do you meet the man or woman who can talk [illegible] and forget [illegible]? Not once in [illegible] [illegible]. [illegible]

"Do you know where I learned one of the best notes in my voice? From a wild bird in a German forest. Again and again I heard that one note. It is high and clear and plaintive. It rings in the memory. It haunts the ear. I spent days out in the woods listening and trying to imitate it. Finally I got it. It has made many a hit for me in opera.

"And it was from a hunting dog that I learned how to relax and rest when I [illegible] tired out. Did you ever [illegible] a tired dog after the chase? He lets go every muscle and simply throws himself down, [illegible] [illegible] the floor. You can just hear him rest.

"A little life in the open, the silence, the vastness of nature, and the whole being is in tune. It repairs the worries of the whirling world and its inhabitants."

W. H.—A new pair of glasses just purchased makes me see little red squares on the flesh of all people at a distance.

This is either some curious refraction of the glass of the lenses or some strange psychological effect, such as you experience when you look constantly for some time at a green color or red and then turn away and see the same figure [illegible] in an opposite color. The glass in the lenses should be analyzed chemically. It filters out the red rays of light and allows all others to pass. The square shape is due to the square crystalline element in the lens.

Advice to Girls

By Annie Laurie

Dear Annie Laurie:

I am almost 17 years old, and a boy friend insists on going with me. My family does not object to me keeping company so long as I keep early hours.

I do not care to go with fellows, as I have more fun with girls, but I do not like to offend this boy.

Would you kindly tell me what to do about this?

I have lots of brown hair, blue eyes and a clear, white skin, white even teeth, long eyelashes and heavy eyebrows. Do you think I am pretty?

DOLLY V.

WHY you funny little Dolly, how in the world can I tell whether you're pretty or not just by the color of your eyes and hair?

A girl can have blue eyes and brown hair and white teeth, and be so ugly that it makes your face ache to look at her. Or she can have all those things and be a raving beauty.

It isn't the color of your hair and the color of your eyes that makes you pretty, you funny little thing. Some people have blue eyes, and some find them shallow and uninteresting.

Keep your brown hair soft and fluffy and prettily arranged; keep your blue eyes clear and bright and smiling, and keep your skin white and smooth, and you won't have to worry about whether you're pretty or not.

I wouldn't fret about the boy friend who "insists" on going with you. He's probably not so easily offended as you seem to think.

Be nice to him and have him for a jolly, happy-go-lucky friend. You're entirely too young to think of anything [illegible].

The Crucial Test

Names now famous may be covered with obloquy, and names now unknown resound throughout the world before the war is over. Britain believes that in Kitchener she possesses a military genius that the rest of the world cannot match. Kitchener is a Moltke, an organizer, and as such is generally admitted to stand unrivaled. He will not, however, lead the army upon the field, and it is open to question if for this task he would be the equal of Lord Roberts, despite the great age of the veteran.

Sir John French, leader of Britain's land forces, achieved a great reputation in the South African war, and was one of the few British commanders who left that "graveyard of military reputations" with a better name than he entered it. Against French it has been alleged that he was a politician, and that his rapid advance in the past few years has been largely due to court and society influence. However, as regards his capacity as a cavalry leader there is no question. No such charge has been heard in reference to Sir John Jellicoe, the commander of the British sea forces. He has been famed as the shortest officer in the navy with the exception of the midshipmen, but in his youth was a noted boxer and all-round athlete. Sir John has seen plenty of fighting, and was present at the bombardment of Alexandria, at Tel-el-Kebir, as an officer of the Naval Brigade, and was wounded in the attempt to relieve the foreign legations at Pekin.

Jellicoe's Charmed Life

In the navy they say that he has a charmed life. He was critically ill with Malta fever on the Victoria when she was rammed and sunk by the Camperdown, and was one of the few who escaped. He was thrown into the shark-infested water with a temperature of 103, and was fished out with a normal temperature and his fever cured. He is as popular with the rank and file of the fleet as is Vice-Admiral Boue de Lapayrere, in command of the French navy. The latter is acknowledged at home and abroad to be the best naval officer in France, and as Minister of Marine and later as chief of the Admiralty staff has helped to bring the French navy to its present state of efficiency.

Gen. Joffre, the commander-in-chief of the French army, is of the Moltke type, a silent, reserved man, and a veteran of the Franco-Prussian War, in which he commanded a battery of artillery in Paris at the age of 18; of the Formosa and Tonkin campaigns, and of the expedition in Madagascar. Joffre is a firm believer in the principle that the best method of defence is a vigorous attack.

The Grand Duke Nicholas Nicholaiewitch, commander of the Russian forces in the field, is rated by most foreign judges as the most brilliant cavalry leader living. The function of cavalry is chiefly to attack, and Russia's function in the present war will be one of invasion.

Russia's Great Organizer

Behind him in St. Petersburg in the War Office is Gen. Sukhomlinof, who is ranked with Kitchener as an organizer. He, too, is a cavalryman, and is largely responsible, with Witte and Stolypin, for the reorganization of the Russian army.

Gen. von Moltke, commander of the German armies, is a nephew of the hero of the Franco-Prussian War, and is renowned in Germany for his taciturnity. He is without war experience, but the fact that he has been able to remain in command of the army for several years and satisfy his exacting master is evidence of his efficiency.

Archduke Frederick of Austria, the eldest brother of the Queen-Mother of Spain, is reckoned a very fine soldier. In fact, so great was his reputation that the late Archduke Frederick Ferdinand did not dare remove him from command of the Austrian army, though they were not on speaking terms.

Austrian Wedding Feast

A wedding whose guests numbered over 8,000 persons and whose feasting continued for eight days was celebrated recently at Sadagora in Bukowina, one of those remote country districts of Austria-Hungary, where mammoth wedding festivities on a scale unknown in America or Western Europe are the rule.

The affair at Sadagora exceeded in magnificence and lavish hospitality any function on record in that district, however. It was a Hebrew wedding. Sadagora enjoys a certain fame in Eastern Europe as the seat of the renowned Rabbinical dynasty known as the Miracle Rabbis. The bride was the daughter of the Grand Rabbi of this line, Aron Friedmann, and the groom, Salamon Friedmann, belongs to a branch of the same Rabbinical dynasty at Czortkow. The marriage was arranged by the chiefs of the two families, entirely without the knowledge of the young people. In fact, they met for the first time only the evening before the wedding at a preliminary feast, when they danced together as a sign of their willingness to marry.

The chiefs had taken it for granted that there would be no hitch in their plans, and had invited the Rabbinical families of all the Orthodox Jews in Russia, Poland, Roumania and Hungary. They came down on Sadagora in thousands. Many were of imposing stature and patriarchal dignity. They wore black silk caftans, low shoes and white stockings, while their ladies were attired in a sort of crinoline and adorned with rich jewels. There were some dressed in the latest modes of Paris and Vienna.

The ceremony took place in the gardens of the Grand Rabbi's palace, guarded by mounted troops. Thousands were unable to hear or see what was going on, so dense was the throng, but all had a hand in the feasting which followed. During the eight days the commissary's books accounted for 200 pounds of fish, 600 head of poultry, 250 pounds of beef, 5,000 pounds of bread and many casks of wine. The Grand Rabbi was out of pocket to the extent of at least $40,000.

In addition to this he presented the bridal couple with a palace in Sadagora, completely furnished and equipped with a staff of servants. He will meet the entire cost of the household for a period of six years, when it is assumed that the young bridegroom will have attained a position where he can support his family himself.

A RUNNING FIGHT IN THE HIGH SEAS

Buenos Ayres, Dec. 10.— (Flash) — It is reported here that the German cruisers Nurnberg and Dresden, which escaped from Admiral Sturdee's squadron on Tuesday have been overtaken and sunk off the Brazilian coast.

The British fleet of Vice Admiral Sir Frederick Sturdee is reported to have completed its victory over the German fleet by overtaking and sinking the cruisers Nurnberg and Dresden. The report of the overtaking and destruction of the two remaining vessels of the German fleet was received here today in a wireless from Port Stanley.

All attempts to get further details of the engagement of Tuesday operating through the Montevideo wireless station have failed. Montevideo is now unable to communicate with Pt. Stanley or get any confirmation of the brief statement that the Nurnberg and Dresden have been sunk.

The battle which resulted in the sinking of the German cruisers Scharnhorst, Gneisenau and Leipzig started in Argentine waters, but developed into a running fight which was carried into the high seas, and the German cruisers are reported to have gone down off the Falkland Islands.

The British losses, according to a wireless report, amounted to less than one hundred killed and wounded.

London, Dec. 10—7.40 p.m.— The Official Bureau announced this afternoon that the German cruiser Nurnberg, one of the warships which escaped from the British in the engagement of Dec. 8, has been sunk.

The fate of the Dresden seems to be in doubt from an official standpoint.

General Contractor, Rollo Bay, P. E. I.

INTRODUCTION

The Glenaladale Silver Black Fox Company, Limited, was incorporated in 1913 with six pairs of foxes, at $90,000. This Company re-capitalized in 1914, with 20 pairs of beautiful Silver Black Foxes, at $15,000 per pair, making a total capitalization of $300,000.

THE FOXES

Six pairs (one year old) proven breeders, and fourteen pairs (1914 pups), making a total of 20 pairs—all young foxes—good for at least 20 years. This Company has bought some of this year's options on foxes with a guarantee that they are pedigreed and of the highest strain and very best quality P. E. Island famous foxes.

THE RANCH

The ranch is situated on the well known Glenaladale Farm, owned by Major C. McKinnon, formerly the [illegible] of Sir William McDonald, and is only 12 miles from Charlottetown, in a quiet locality sufficiently removed from any disturbance.

THE RANCHER

Mr. Arthur V. McKinnon, our Ranch Manager, has had much experience in breeding foxes, and has the practical knowledge necessary to [illegible] for the animals.

The foxes will be ranched free of charge to the Company for the first year. This means a large saving to the shareholders, as some companies have to pay as high as 25 per cent. of the income for ranching purposes.

The promoters of this Company are [illegible] worth of stock for themselves. [illegible] worth has already been disposed of, leaving [illegible] to be offered to investors at $25.00 per share, with a guarantee that a dividend of 50 per cent. will be paid in cash in 1915, or whatever more it may be.

The Glenaladale Silver Black Fox Co., Limited, in 1913 guaranteed a dividend of 50 per cent. but are going to pay 50 per cent. in cash and [illegible] per cent. in stock in 1914. The Company is in good standing and to each and every investor the first of September, 1914, we can say—"We have given you 50 per cent. more than we promised." And we feel sure that in 1915 all the shareholders in this re-capitalized company will be able to say they received more than they were promised.

This Company can truthfully say that they have not one cent of watered stock in the Company. Now Mr. Investor, if you were a Company and we the shareholders, we would look to you for justice to give us all that was honestly due us. We would not like for you to buy 2 pairs of foxes at $15,000 per pair ($30,000) and form a fox company and capitalize your concern at [illegible] and make us pay, as shareholders, for it. The Glenaladale Silver Black Fox Company, Limited, will ask you to do nothing like that. We want to let you in on the ground floor.

NOTICE

When a fox company guarantees any specified dividend to its shareholders, and when said company is an incorporated body, you need not be afraid of any crooked play, for such company is compelled to pay what they promise, and, besides, every interest is taken for the welfare of both the investor and the company.

The promoters of this Company are all above board and will not permit any crook to come in and do anything that is not right. Anyone holding stock in this Company who is dissatisfied can, by notifying the Secretary-Treasurer, have his or her money promptly refunded.

FORTUNES IN FOXES

There is money in fox ranching more than anything else ever known. It is good for the rich man and good for the poor man. A poor man cannot buy a pair of Silver Black Foxes but he can easily raise $25.00, $50.00 or $100.00. By investing in this Company he gets back his money in at least two years and then he will have an income for life and for his children to come—and after them will be money in fox farming. One of the reasons for this is that P. E. Island has now 95 per cent. of the world's foxes in captivity. For every one pelt that can be raised there are more than 25 wealthy people waiting for it in London, Russia, France and America.

PELT VALUES

The Fox Pelts have advanced greatly in price since 1910 and you can see for yourself what money was in them then.

All cheques must be made payable to "The Glenaladale Silver Black Fox Co., Ltd."

A POINTER

Just to give you a little idea of what the fox ranching of foxes means to the investor, we will figure it out for you.

We have twenty pairs of foxes in the ranch and suppose each pair produce a litter of only four pups, this is equal to 40 pairs and at $15,000 per year it would figure out at $600,000. Now, if we had to pay even 15 per cent. of the increase for ranching purposes (which is considerably lower than some companies pay) it would mean that we would have to pay $90,000 for ranching expenses.

We ranch the foxes free for the first year, so that in addition to a guaranteed dividend of 50 per cent., we save you this large outlay of money. While we guarantee 50 per cent., still should each pair in our ranch produce four pups it would mean that your dividend would be about 200 per cent. instead of 50 per cent.

FINAL WORD

A great deal has been written about Ranches, Grades of Foxes, etc., but after all the one thing that every investor should keep before him is the dividend he is going to get. We have tried to show you in plain [illegible] what we can do for you and now that you have our proposition, compare it with the offer made by any other company now in [illegible] and judge for yourself, to have [illegible] by some of the Charlottetown newspapers.

and shrinking revenue, as well as to meet maturing interest, capital commitments, and other obligations.

FOREIGN RESERVES VALUABLE.

Our reserves abroad have proved valuable in this connection, as they are enabling us to conserve the gold supply of Canada.

War and other adverse conditions are bound to retard our progress. A period of rest and recuperation may be expected but the future depends to a great extent upon the spirit with which the people meet the changed conditions.

Economy and prudence in the matter of expenditure, and an earnest effort to increase production of exportable articles, will in time usher in an era of active trade and renewed prosperity.

There is no question in my mind that after a pause, the duration of which will be determined by the measure of our production and by our savings, we shall again enter on a period of progress and development, and that pause I believe, will not be long continued.

Mr. R. B. Angus seconded the motion for the adoption of the Report, which was carried unanimously.

GENERAL MANAGER'S ADDRESS.

Sir Frederick Williams-Taylor, the General Manager of the Bank, then made his annual address, as follows:

Gentlemen:—This Bank is now approaching its centenary, but never before in the ninety-seven years of its history has the annual balance sheet been presented to the Shareholders under such universally perturbed financial conditions as exist at the present time.

For the sake of consecutiveness and as a natural preface, I may say that since the outbreak of the present war all bourses have ceased to transact business. In consequence throughout the world at large Stock Exchange securities have become unrealizable except by limited sale and slow process.

In a sense a large part of the trading and manufacturing world has undergone a course of deflation towards first principles. The most readily saleable commodities in large volume now are the necessities of life either direct or represented by commercial paper, and the appliances created by man for the destruction of life.

As the President has ably reviewed the general trade and financial situation, both in Canada and at the chief centres abroad, my duties are confined to an explanation of the most important features in the accounts I have the honor to submit to you and the points arising therefrom.

It is pertinent to interject that the interests of the Bank of Montreal have become of such an international character that one cannot adequately analyze and comment upon our balance sheet without at least reference to London and New York.

LONDON

The interest taken by Canada in the London financial situation is due to a combination of firm patriotism and monetary dependence. Not only are we solicitous for the welfare of our Empire's financial centre, but the Dominion has financed its requirements in that market to an extent obvious enough to the few but only partially fully appreciated by the people of this country as a whole.

It might be added without boastfulness that this Bank's London business has steadily increased in importance step by step with the development of our country until we have attained a prestige, and what has been termed by others a unique position among Colonial Banks represented in the great metropolis that you, its Shareholders, can regard with a measure of national, and may I say individual pride.

NEW YORK

We are naturally greatly interested in New York conditions, as not only is that city the Clearing House of North America, but also the channel through which the bulk of our foreign exchange transactions pass. Further, the financial relations of the two countries become more intimate and further dovetailed with the ever-increasing establishment in Canada of branches of great American industrial companies.

POLICY-LIQUIDITY

It is common knowledge that the policy of this Bank is conservatism, a policy that tends in prosperous days to arouse in some quarters a measure of criticism, but one meeting with unstinted approval in times as troublous as those we face at present.

Thanks to a reasonably liquid position, the unexpected outbreak of war found us not unprepared. It was an easy transition for us to convert into actual cash and bank balances, to the extent we deemed advisable, our second line of defence in the shape of other reserves held, as you are aware, in London and New York.

PROFITS—PATRIOTIC FUND

As Banks are not eleemosynary institutions, it is our duty to earn for the sha[redacted] such measure of profit as is [redacted]t with the safe employment of your capital and the deposit monies entrusted to our care. Under normal conditions, our first consideration has ever, as you know, been safety, but with the financial world out of joint we have felt it our duty, both in self protection and in a desire to bear our share of the national burden in safeguarding the general situation, to take additional precautions. In pursuance of this policy our cash reserves and bank balances have been brought up to a percentage point that seemingly precludes danger.

Naturally the greater volume of money unemployed, the smaller our profits. Nevertheless we are gratified to have been [redacted] earn our custom[redacted] continue the semi-annual [redacted], and at the same time to have made, in our opinion, full provision for realized and prospective losses.

The $100,000 gladly voted by your Directors for national patriotic purposes was taken out of the year's profits.

DEPOSITS.

For obvious reasons it is natural that bank deposits throughout Canada should decline as they have done to a slight extent, the grand total of all the banks to the end of October being $1,144,109,294, as compared with $1,146,739,868 a year ago. During the same period our own deposits have increased by $7,649,836.11 exclusive of deposits made by and balances due to other banks in Canada, which have increased by $5,570,988.88.

CIRCULATION

QUICK ASS[redacted]URRENT LOANS.

As before [redacted] our quick assets have increased during the year, the ratio to liabilities to the public being 55.17 per cent. at the end of October, 1914, as compared with 49.40 per cent. at the same date in 1913. It is satis[redacted] to be able to state that this has been accomplished without restricting the legitimate demands upon us by our merchant and manufacturing clientele in Canada. It is the case that our current loans in Canada, which, as you are aware, are mainly to the mercantile community, are lower now by $10,172,088.79 than they were at the corresponding date last year, but I desire to make it quite clear that the reduction was ante bellum, and that there has been an increase of over three million dollars in such loans and of over thirteen million dollars in total loans in Canada since the outbreak of war.

It is only fair to add that the wisdom of keeping our secondary reserves —viz.: our call loans— in London and New York instead of in Canada has once again been strikingly demonstrated. If the war has found us in a reverse position it would have indeed been a serious matter, not only for ourselves, but for the entire community. In other words, the wisdom of this Bank in having its call loans available outside of Canada in time of stress is now being splendidly justified.

MUNICIPALITIES.

Our loans to municipalities stand at $9,917,681.36, as compared with $8,397,848.74 at the corresponding date last year. A very large proportion of this sum has been advanced in anticipation of tax payments.

Loans have been made against the security of debentures in certain instances, but only as a matter of public policy to enable our civic clients to pay for work to which they were committed, or where the health or safety of the citizens was at stake. We have felt it our duty to urge upon both our Provincial and Municipal friends the wisdom if not the imperative necessity of refraining from committing themselves to fresh capital outlay and of limiting their expenditure to essential undertakings. I am glad to be able to say that as a rule our advice has been well received and in most cases conscientiously followed.

PROVINCES.

I would now like to briefly recite to you the situation as we find it in our various Provinces.

PROVINCE OF ONTARIO.

General conditions in Ontario are moderately satisfactory. Crops have been quite good, with high prices, and profitable results have accrued generally to those engaged in agricultural pursuits.

The lumber trade is dull.

The production of silver in the Cobalt District shows a slight falling off.

Manufacturing has been quiet, with a material reduction in the labor employed, particularly in those industries producing machinery and agricultural implements.

Wholesale conditions are reasonably satisfactory, but retail merchants are feeling the decreased volume of business consequent upon reduced wages and pay-rolls.

Urban real estate is inactive, but a lower level in prices is inevitable.

PROVINCE OF QUEBEC.

Reasonably satisfactory conditions prevail throughout the Province of Quebec, which, if less progressive than some of its sister Provinces, is also for the same reason less liable to periods of depression.

Agricultural conditions have been reasonably good.

The lumber trade has had an average year and the price and demand from Great Britain are improving, due to the closing of the Baltic and the curtailment of the cut in Russia consequently upon mobilization.

Manufacturing industries have been quiescent with fewer operatives employed, but textile and certain other lines are stimulated by orders from abroad.

There has been little movement in real estate, but nominal values have not appreciably fallen.

MARITIME PROVINCES

Though the Maritime Provinces are not enjoying the same measure of prosperity as a year ago, economic conditions may be summed up as being fairly healthy, and surprisingly good as compared with those the world over. This, perhaps, may be attributed to the fact that previously there has been an absence of inflation and fictitious prosperity, and consequently no severe reaction.

The farmers are more than usually prosperous. The apple crop has been large and of excellent quality, but this unfortunately is offset by the low prices prevailing.

Much money has been invested in the black fox industry, but this business has proved hazardous, and the possible result of a marked decline in prices must not be overlooked.

The demand and price for lumber declined during the early part of the year, but the foreign trade is improving with a resultant upward tendency in prices.

The fishing industry has been less satisfactory. The catch shows a reduction and lower prices prevail.

There has been a diminution of upwards of 250,000 tons in the coal mined in Nova Scotia as compared with last year, largely accounted for by the partial closing down of steel plants and other allied industries. This unfavorable feature of the situation is reflected in the manufacturing towns.

NORTH WEST PROVINCES.

In the North West Provinces agriculture and stock-raising are of primary importance, and all other industries and businesses are more or less directly or indirectly dependent upon the success of the farming community.

The results of the crop for the year 1914 have been satisfactory. Certain districts suffered severely from drought at the critical period, and the total yield is consequently less than last year, but with the higher prices prevailing the value of the grain produced is somewhat greater. More land is being brought under cultivation and owing to the early harvest and a favorable autumn it is expected that a record acreage will be under crop next year.

Mixed farming is receiving more attention with gratifying results and more stock is being raised.

The flour mills are well employed, but other manufacturing industries are quiet.

Trade conditions are not altogether satisfactory, but credit is granted less freely than formerly.

There has been a decline in realty values with few transactions.

The North West Provinces undoubtedly are passing through a period of stress, but with their great areas of good farm lands still uncultivated, capable of producing vast food supplies, we look to the future with a justifiable measure of confidence.

PROVINCE OF BRITISH COLUMBIA

British Columbia after nearly two decades of almost continuous prosperity, development and expansion in business is now suffering from reaction, accentuated by the general commercial depression and world-wide financial distress.

Agricultural conditions continue to show improvement. Crops are good, but the prices for fruit have not come up to expectations. There is a tendency to increase the production of live stock for which the demand is good.

It is a matter of common knowledge that the lumber business has been in an unsatisfactory state resultant upon over production, restriction in building operations throughout the West, and American competition.

It is estimated that the total mineral production for 1914 will be 75 per cent. of last year. Consequent upon the inactivity of the smelters, the collieries also are not doing so well, and the output of coal has been greatly diminished.

The fisheries have had a successful season. The salmon run has been good with a steady demand and satisfactory prices. The halibut catch also has been satisfactory, but the market is less so.

Provincial and municipal expenditure is of necessity being curtailed.

The year 1914 has marked an almost complete cessation in real estate speculation with a general decline in values.

NEWFOUNDLAND

General conditions in Newfoundland, England's oldest Colony, cannot be described as altogether satisfactory.

The pulp and paper industry is normal. The catch of codfish, the great staple product of the country, has been smaller than usual and the outbreak of war practically demoralized for a time the usual markets, resulting in a slackening demand and low prices. In both, however, I am glad to state an improvement is now perceptible. The seal catch was almost up to the average but the lobster catch has been unsatisfactory.

As trade conditions in Newfoundland are governed almost entirely by the return from fisheries, business generally is affected disadvantageously this year and the immediate outlook is somewhat uncertain. Nevertheless it is well to bear in mind that the Island's all important product is a staple article of food and it may be that the war, so far disadvantageous, may presently prove otherwise.

MEXICO.

Conditions in Mexico continue disturbed with business practically at a standstill and it is problematical when a more settled state of affairs may be expected.

THE EFFECT UPON CANADA

Your President, has adequately reviewed the general situation in a masterly manner that makes further remarks superfluous, but perhaps I may be permitted to say in summary of my own comments that from the financial point of view the outstanding result of the war upon Canada has been the instantaneous stoppage of the supply of British [illegible] to which we had become so [illegible]customed that sight was too frequently lost of its importance as a factor in the development of the Dominion.

Money from this source flowed to us in such increasing volume that during a considerable ante bellum period it amounted in round figures to at least $25,000,000 per month. Canadian public borrowings from the London money market for the seven months ending 31st July were $177,000,000. Since the outbreak of war the inflow of such capital has ceased.

This monetary deprivation coupled with the necessity of using our earnings and income for the purpose of paying to Great Britain interest on our indebtedness of $3,000,000,000 to London has brought home to us the extent to which the London money market and the British investor have been our friends, indeed our partners, in what might be termed this colossal Canadian enterprise.

TRADE.

The trade situation we are now facing is that, owing to our present inability to borrow by public process in the London market, we seemingly must limit our imports to the approximate volume we are able to pay for in exports, or we must borrow elsewhere; that is, in the natural assumption that we wish to avoid reducing our cash capital.

There is an alternative, for it will be obvious to the most uninitiated that if our good neighbours in the United States desire us to purchase from them in anything approaching the volume of the past, they must, at least, during the war, whilst the London market for public flotations is closed, provide us with the wherewithal in the shape of loans to our principal public borrowers. If they adopt this course, and a commencement has already been made, it will be clearly advantageous to them and to Canada.

HOW CANADA IS STANDING THE STRAIN.

[redacted] conclusion, the financial position [redacted] country now is that, consequent upon the prompt measures adopted by our Minister of Finance, and owing to the elasticity and excellence of our Banking system, Canada is standing the strain, without collapse. We are adjusting ourselves to the heavy burden thrust upon us without wavering whilst in the constructional stage, and though here and there weak spots will develop, the general structure will surely stand the strain, and we hope and believe, we, as a country, can safeguard the situation.

It is obvious to everyone in the Dominion and to our friends abroad that we are cast upon our own resources, that we are on trial, and that our future development will depend in no small measure upon the condition in which we emerge from this trying ordeal. The longer the duration of the war, the more will the colonial peoples of the Empire, including Canada, suffer, but good will come out of evil, for our energies will be turned to the development of our great natural [redacted] particularly our vast agricultural resources, and we can then look forward with confidence to eventually emerging from present conditions a wiser people with our affairs on a healthier, more normal and sounder basis than that with which we are threatened.

ELECTION OF OFFICERS

The result of the ballot for the election of Directors was declared by the Chairman as follows: Messrs. R. B. Angus, D. Forbes Angus, A. Baumgarten, Huntly R. Drummond, C. B. Gordon, E. B. Greenshields, C. R. Hosmer, Sir William C. Macdonald, Hon. Robert Mackay, Wm. McMaster, H. V. Meredith, D. Morrice, Sir Thomas Shaughnessy, K.C., V.O.

The meeting then terminated.

At a subsequent meeting of the Directors, Mr. H. V. Meredith was re-elected President.

INSPECTOR'S RECORD

Comrades' Handsome Recognition of the Good Work and Record of Chief

There was an interesting presentation at Shepherd's Bush Police Station when ex-Inspector William Powell, of the T division, was the recipient of a handsome marble clock, subscribed for by his colleagues on his retirement after twenty-five years' service. Coupled with the gift was a three-stone diamond dress ring for Mrs. Powell.

Mr. Powell, who is a native of Oxford, has spent the whole of his life in the Government service. He is the son of an old Crimean veteran—one of the six finest officers in the British Army, who were selected to carry the coffin at the funeral of the Duke of Wellington. As a lad he joined the Post Office as a telegrapher, and when old enough enlisted in the Royal Engineers. In the early eighties he was with his regiment in Dublin, and during the troublous times there acted a telegrapher in Castle Yard. Wishing to go abroad, Mr. Powell then sought service with the 3rd Buffs, and did service in Hongkong and Kowloon, China, Singapore, the Straits Settlements, and India. On his return to England in 1885 he won the first prize for Army signalling at Dover.

Joining the Metropolitan Police in 1889, he served at Penge, Peckham and later at Marlborough Mews; and, on promotion to sergeant, was sent to Devonport Dockyard, where he was coxswain of the police pinnace and in charge of the gun wharf. Seven years ago he went to Shepherd's Bush. He possesses the Queen Victoria Diamond Jubilee and King Edward VII. and King George Coronation medals, and he was specially selected for duty in Wales at the investiture of the Prince of Wales at Carnarvon Castle in 1911.

3000 TONS OF OATS READY FOR SHIPMENT IN MONTREAL

[illegible] on the declaration of war the Canadian Government [illegible] by the Imperial Government to supervise the purchase and transport of commissariat supplies which Canada could provide for the Expeditionary Force in France, Hon. Robert Rogers, Minister of Public Works was [illegible] selected to take charge of this responsible work. [illegible] so practical a man as Mr. Rogers that the handling of such huge orders as were in sight must be done by experienced transport officials and, among others, he consulted Sir Thomas Shaughnessy, president of the Canadian Pacific Railway. Sir Thomas considered it a patriotic duty to place at his [illegible] disposal, without cost to the Canadian Government, the services of Mr. A. H. Harris, special traffic representative of the C.P.R. together with such of the company's staff as Mr. [illegible] select for purposes of administration. As this staff eventually numbered nearly twenty picked men, the value of the offer was considerable, and its acceptance by the Canadian Government has given the British War Office an efficient [illegible] and saved a large sum of money.

The value of expert handling was demonstrated by the prompt chartering of vessels on a minimum charter rate, enabling the administration to maintain an average freight on oats during the past three months of 25 cents per hundred pounds, and $1.28 per gross ton on hay. Although owing to the scarcity of tonnage, freight rates have risen rapidly since September, five vessels have cleared from Montreal for a French port during the past ten days, the charter parties averaging 25 cents per 100 pounds on oats and $5.00 on hay, a saving of close to 30 per cent. on current commercial rates. In addition to this the C.P.R. [illegible] no charge for use of its docks by the chartered vessels and has warehoused everything free—being helped in this generous treatment by the [illegible] which also placed portions of its sheds at the disposal of the Government. Over 650,000 sacks have been stored in and passed through C.P.R. sheds, and in addition [illegible] of sacked oats were piled in the upper [illegible] of the C.P.R. dock warehouses and subsequently loaded into chartered vessels consigned to French ports [illegible] toba and Alberta Governments received the same generous treatment in connection with the forwarding of [illegible].

The shipments handled by this administration from September 1st to date, including flour, war office supplies, and French army blankets, total the [illegible] tons [illegible] of storage, dockage, or steamship demurrage charges. The rapidity with which supplies went forward was shown in a recent cable from England [illegible] as they were arriving too fast to be properly handled. In fact, a record has been established which it will take a long time to beat, and those connected have come in for well merited congratulations. The season of St. Lawrence navigation having closed, war office supplies will continue to be forwarded during the winter months via the Maritime Provinces por

An Appeal to the Intelligent Investor!

Does a logical probability of a good investment interest you? Do you believe there is an oil in commercial quantities in Alberta? If you are alive to the situation you do. Then it will pay you to investigate our proposition and our holdings.

Please Read Carefully and Note!

THAT Oil authorities are agreed the Alberta Oil Field is of an anticlinal formation. It has been fairly accurately ascertained in what general direction these anticlines run. Geologist D. W. Dunn chose wisely in the selection of the now famous Monarch well. WINDSOR OILFIELDS, LIMITED, has holdings located close to the Monarch.

THAT Cunningham Craig, one of the world's most eminent geologists, selected the site of the Mowbray-Berkeley well. Stock in that company is not offered at any price. We possess acreage adjoining the Mowbray-Berkeley (Section 12, Township 23, Range 5, West of 5th). If a strike is made at the Mowbray-Berkeley what will shares in our company be worth?

Our holdings consist of 1280 acres, carefully selected and judiciously spread over the entire oil field.

BRITISH NEWS BRIEFLY TOLD

At Glasgow Police Court a man named James Rafferty was charged with having committed an assault on his son, aged four. In Richmond Park the man took off the boy's clothing and dipped him in the pond. The incident attracted a crowd. Accused was sentenced to thirty days' imprisonment.

Sleepwalker's Fall

Henry Kenyon, Hebden Bridge, fell out of a bedroom window while walking in his sleep. Awakened by his terrible fall, Kenyon's call for help in the dead of night aroused many neighbors, who found him in a shocking condition.

Young Lady's Fall From Cliff

Miss M. Ross left her father's residence in the evening to go for a walk, and the following morning she was found lying helpless at the bottom of the quarry, having accidentally fallen a distance of eighty feet from the top of the cliff, where there is a right of way. Rain fell in torrents during the night.

Victimising a Clergyman

At the High Court at Edinburgh Wm. Gordon Miller was sent to penal servitude for five years for having at Dundee pretended to a clergyman residing there that he had been injured in a railway accident and that he was to be married and wanted the clergyman to perform the ceremony. He proposed to arrange the date and borrowed a shilling from the clergyman. There were previous convictions against the prisoner.

Children Poisoned

Two children, a girl of two years and a boy of eleven, belonging to a family of the name of Forbes, who hail from the Glasgow district, were accidentally poisoned at Port Lamont, near Toward, where they were staying on holiday. The two children went out [illegible] on Sunday, and it is believed they drank poisoned water or ate some green growth. The girl has died in great pain.

Baby's Remarkable Escape

A fatal accident occurred on the Highland line two miles south of Pitlochry, the victim being Rose M'Millan, thirty-seven, who had for the last week been employed at Moulinearn. Carrying her three-year-old child, she was shopping in Pitlochry, and for a short cut home had apparently taken to the line. She was run down by the goods train from Aviemore to Perth. The body was shockingly mutilated. The child was found lying sleeping peacefully by the side of the line.

Life Lost For Water Lilies

A pretty young girl named Katie Clark, of Brebar, aged nineteen, who was staying with her aunt in Boyle, went to look after her uncle's cattle on a farm which is situated near a bathing place on the Boyle river. At four o'clock the same afternoon some bathers discovered her dead body, fully dressed, in about four feet of water. It is supposed that in an attempt to pull some water lilies she lost her balance, and was unable to recover herself.

Oldest Inhabitant's Memories

The death is announced of Berwick's oldest inhabitant, Mrs. Lee, who was close upon ninety-nine years of age. Mrs. Lee remembered the last public execution in Berwick, which was that of a woman who had murdered her husband. The execution took place on a gallows erected in the open street. The gallows was housed in a yard near her residence, and as a girl Mrs. Lee used to play on its steps.

Plucky Brother

While bathing in the River Waveney, Charles Gray, fifteen, was drowned, and his brother Ivan, fourteen, at a Bolton (Suffolk) inquest said Charles seemed to have been attacked by cramp. He himself swam nearly eighty yards with Charles holding his arm and towed him until he gradually became exhausted. Within a few yards of the bank Charles let go and sank. He (Ivan) only just managed to reach the bank. The jury praised the boy's pluck and returned a verdict of "Accidentally drowned."

Poisoned by Potted Meat

At a Todmorden inquest it was stated that the whole family had eaten potted meat, and that of the three children of a bricklayer named Cavanagh, who all became ill, Hannah, aged seven, died. An extensive post-mortem led the doctor to the opinion that death was caused by ptomaine poisoning, set up by bacteria of a kind chiefly found in decomposing food. The butcher who sold the meat said it was made of [illegible], and his own family had some of the same [illegible]. [illegible]

HOME-MADE ATLANTIC BOAT

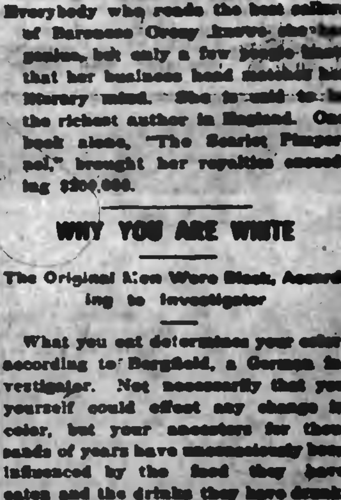
Crippled Mariner Fails at Perilous Trip After Sailing Sixty Miles

Setting out to cross the Atlantic in a home-made sailing boat, a crippled Bridgeport mariner made only sixty miles when he had to be rescued by a fishing smack, that towed his boat back into Plymouth.

Harborrow, the mariner, had bad luck from the start in meeting head winds, and it took him five days to make that tiny slice of the big trip.

For two years Harborrow had worked at his boat, his only tools being a knife, saw, and hammer. When finished, it was a crude craft, equipped with water and oil tanks made by the old man.

With forty gallons of water, half a hundredweight of biscuits, and other provisions, Harborrow had hoped to last out his lonely voyage.



BARONESS ORCZY

Everybody who reads the best sellers of Baroness Orczy knows she has genius, but only a few people know that her business head matches her literary mind. She is said to be the richest author in England. One book alone, "The Scarlet Pimpernel," brought her royalties exceeding $200,000.

WHY YOU ARE WHITE

The Original Men Were Black, According to Investigator

What you eat determines your color, according to Bergfeld, a German investigator. Not necessarily that you yourself could effect any change in color, but your ancestors for thousands of years have unconsciously been influenced by the food they have eaten and the drinks they have drunk.

For instance, the original men were black, says Bergfeld. Their chief diet was of vegetables and fruits, he explains, and these same foods contain manganates that are not unlike iron. Dark browns and blacks result from this combination. It is a scientific fact that negroes who drink milk and eat meat are never as dark as those who eat vegetables.

He goes on to add that the Indian is red because for hundreds, and perhaps thousands, of years he has taken into his system the haemoglobin, or red material in the blood of animals which he has killed for food.

Again, Mongols are yellow because they have descended from races that were fruit-eating, and who, making their way into the deepest nooks and widest plains of Asia, developed into shepherds and lived largely on milk. Of course it is known that milk contains a certain percentage of chlorine, and has a decidedly bleaching effect. In the case of Caucasians, they are said to have become white by adding salt to their foods, which common salt is a strong chloride, and powerful in bleaching the skin.

THE RIGHT WAY TO STRIKE A MATCH.

Once in a while we have complaints about our matches breaking in two. This is no fault of the Match, as EDDY'S MATCHES are made from specially selected straight-grained wood only. For the benefit of those who are still in ignorance of the proper way to hold a match (and there are many) we give the following advice—

"The forefinger of the right hand should be placed over the tip of the match and withdrawn quickly when the flame comes. This prevents any undue leverage on the match, and instinct prevents one getting one's finger burned."

TASTEFUL DRESSING MEANS MUCH TO GIRLS

They Should be Taught the Difference Between Smartness and Loudness in Gowns and Hats

The future success in life of a girl may and often does depend upon her taste in dress. There isn't a bit of use in disguising this fact from ourselves, for it is the simple truth as anyone with an experience of the world can testify. Have we not all seen the pretty dowdy passed by for her plain but smart rival?

A dull-colored, unbecoming, badly made gown can work tragedy in the career of a girl, although she may have pretty hair, good teeth, and a nice complexion. Whatever you teach a girl, teach her the value of wearing clothes that suit her.

Don't let her grow up with the idea that one new gown is as good as another—and, of all things, don't let her get the notion into her head that the cost is the chief thing that counts in clothing.

A certain woman never pays less than [illegible] each for her hats—hideous hats—because they are quite evidently bought as hats, expensive hats, and nothing else. They have no connection of any kind with her complexion or the color of her hair and eyes.

She never seems to have on a new hat, strange to say: they all bear the [illegible] If you picked them to pieces you would no doubt find that they were made of the best materials.

In the endeavor to avoid dowdiness, [illegible] to [illegible] an outer appearance [illegible] "smartness."

[illegible] Smartness is not "loudness" in color and [illegible] in style, and if you can teach girls this you will be doing them a real service.

Smartness, be it ever so smart, will not jar the vision, as the "loud" style and color will.

Another valuable lesson for little girls to learn is suitability in dress. Many mothers fail to instil into their daughters' minds that dress for business hours, for morning hours, for working hours can hardly be too plain and unobtrusive. Dress, [illegible] to the [illegible] unless it be [illegible] a pretty [illegible] of [illegible] culture and good breeding.

THE SIGHING HABIT

[illegible] Usually Means That the Lungs Need Fresh Air

Sighing is often an audible expression of some emotion. But often it is an involuntary inspiration and respiration caused by insufficient oxygen in the body.

[illegible] In such cases it is clearly [illegible] cause for oxygen starvation. And it should be taken as a [illegible]

Often the person who has become subject to the sighing habit will find, on self-examination, that she is in a state of [illegible] run-down [illegible]

The remedy is frequently the rearrangement of conditions which will make it possible to have more [illegible] fresh air to breathe.

If you are a "sigher," look to the air facilities and ventilation in the place or places in which you constantly work or live.

If you are sighing and don't know any good reason for the action, get up and open a window; go through a few simple exercises; move around briskly; get some more air into your lungs and then go back to the occupation of the hour. You will probably find your "sighing" tendency diminishing and finally disappearing altogether.

Hairdressing [illegible]

A popular hair [illegible] is the French twist or the French roll as it is called, but any becoming hair dress can be worn, providing it is fairly tight to the head at the sides and [illegible] leaves to [illegible] some part of the ear showing. [illegible] styles of [illegible] the [illegible]

WOMAN HIGHLY MORAL

Easier For Her to be Good Than Man, Says Winnipeg Minister

Is a man morally weaker than a woman? was one of the questions asked by Rev. Dr. J. L. Gordon of Winnipeg during a course of lectures.

"I will answer that," he said, "by saying that a woman is morally stronger than a man. Man is the incarnation of passion and force. Woman is the incarnation of conscience." He continued that womanhood formed the anchor that holds the race to moral and Christian living.

In answer to the question as to whether the association of men and women in commercial life tends to lower the moral life, he said that it opens the door to temptation, but he considered the Anglo-Saxon womanhood morally the best in the world, and better now than it was 100 years ago. The working of men and women in the business life brought temptation, [illegible] the best of character and developed better manhood and [illegible] than where the women [illegible] from associating with men.

Little Things Worth Knowing

To make [illegible] brown and crisp [illegible] brush top crust with milk.

Plunge tomatoes in very hot water, then into cold. The skin will come off easily, and they will remain firm.

Windows and bureau drawers that open stiffly should be rubbed with dry soap.

Save all papers that come around bread or cracker boxes to clean and irons.

Rub sad irons over a layer of salt if rough or sticky.

If a lemon is warmed before squeezing nearly double the quantity of juice will be obtained.

Home Cold Storage

The more quickly an article of food is cooled the longer it will keep.

Never place food [illegible] on the ice. [illegible] onions, parsley, turnips or cabbage must be [illegible] or the entire box will be full of their odors.

Fish and cheese impart their flavor [illegible] to milk and butter and often render them unfit for use. Keep fish and cheese out of the refrigerator.

Keep pieces of charcoal in an old refrigerator. This will relieve the [illegible] odor. Renew every two or three days.

[illegible]

To remove the odor from bottles or jugs which have been used for kerosene [illegible] in [illegible] milk or lime. This [illegible] with the oil and removes every trace; by washing a second time with milk of lime and a little chloride of lime, all odor will disappear.

ASCOT REALLY ROYAL

The King Could Take Half the Receipts But It Goes for Upkeep

It was an interesting story which Mr. Upjohn, K.C., told a Select Committee of the House of Lords when they had before them the Ascot Authority Bill, promoted by Lord Churchill, as the King's representative, and Sir William Carington, Keeper of the Privy Purse, for the purpose of forming one legal authority connected with Ascot Racecourse.

Mr. Upjohn said the objects of the Bill were to form one authority for the management of Ascot races and to vest in that one authority all the property until now vested in two different bodies.

Private race meetings were originally held in the King's Park, and in those days the races were under the management of the Master of the Buckhounds. One reason for the bill was that the office of Master of the Buckhounds was abolished in 1901, and since that time his place had been filled by Lord Churchill, as the King's representative, and Sir William Carington.

Another reason why it was necessary to put things on a more legal footing was that from time to time leases had been granted by the King. Ascot Heath was a Royal domain. With one exception—the grandstand—all the properties had been brought together and were held by Lord Churchill and Sir William Carington.

Colonel Bulkeley, the senior trustee, said it was desirable that there should be some body which would act as a buffer between the King and the people, because that body would prevent any ill-minded person from taking the King's name in a wrong way.

Mr. Reginald Corventry agreed that [illegible] arrangement [illegible] any suggestion that the King was making money out [illegible] King was entitled to half the takings of Ascot.

"What does his Majesty do with it?" asked Mr. Balfour Browne, K.C., and, amid laughter, Mr. Coventry replied, "I don't know."

Lord Churchill stated that every single shilling was spent for the [illegible] of Ascot races. Expenses were very heavy, and the whole upkeep of the racecourse had to be paid for out of the income.

GREAT SWIMMER FROM PACIFIC ISLES

Brown Skinned Duke Kahanamoku Like an Eel in the Water—Has Method of His Own

To see the great Duke Kahanamoku, the Hawaiian champion, in action, is to see the exemplification of perfection in the art of swimming. He is the master of the liquid element. Speed, grace, power and absolute confidence are all his, making in the aggregate the world's most wonderful swimmer.

When under way his grace and form seem to mark him as almost too perfect to be human. It is very apparent that the great swimmer loves the water. It is his own element, and he acts as if he had been born upon the breast of the heaving Pacific. Any man who can swim 50 yards in 22 4-5 seconds after a slow start, smashing all records with the appearance of only half trying, must be a wonder.

It would probably take a booklet to discuss Kahanamoku's style and form, but there are a few features that stand out above all others.

Speed From Leg Stroke

In the first place, it looks as though his great speed and power comes from the unique use of his legs. He does not use the [illegible] or the regular crawl kick. He [illegible] his pedal extremities straight up and down, but in pigeon-toed manner. This makes his feet take the form of propeller blades, as is shown by the action of the water in his wake while he is in motion. The water bubbles up after him in exactly the same way as it does in the trail of a motor boat or a torpedo.

This method is not unknown, but few swimmers can use it well owing to the fact that, with the toes turned in, cramps are apt to follow and those who can use it at all never can keep up the style, but the Duke swims in no other way.

For some reason the duke is very slow starting. This is the only feature of the duke's work that could be improved upon. After he once leaves the side of the tank, his dive is a beautiful thing. He gets the full power and distance of his jump, and picks up his stroke at the exact end of the force of the jump, unlike so many sprinters, who begin to splash the minute they hit the water.

He does not seem to jump into his racing speed until he has gone 25 yards, but this may be due to the fact that there is nobody alongside him at the finish.

Swims Very Smoothly

After leaving the twenty-five-yard mark, his wonderful footwork comes into play, and like a high-powered motor boat he begins to draw away from the field. There is not a jerk or a jump to his progression through the water, every stroke is timed to pick up the work of the one just finished, so he forges ahead like a speedy cruiser on an even keel.

When he reaches the turn, another exhibition of the [illegible] of [illegible] efficiency is given. He does not vary his gait or slacken his speed, but comes right up to the turn, then like a great eel his glistening body twists for a moment, making a swirling eddy, he drops out of sight, but the next second comes shooting to the surface like a rocket.

He takes the turn neatly, placing his feet [illegible] on the back of the tank, then with a mighty heave, he starts on the back stretch. It is a superb demonstration of perfect muscular control.

ARGENTINE'S BIG STAKES

Horse Racing Flourishes Because of Huge Purses Offered

Don Miguel Martinez de Hoz who purchased Craganour, favorite in the Derby race made famous by the suicide of a suffragette, is no believer in the British racing system. He has an infinitely higher opinion of the methods of the Argentine racing authorities, and he attributes the flourishing condition of the breeding industry in that country entirely to the generous stakes put up for competition.

"In the Argentine," he pointed out, "the smallest stake for which we race is $2,500, and the highest is over $50,000, so that an owner with a decent string of horses can make from $100,000 to $150,000 a year from his racing ventures. The source from which these huge stakes spring is the totalisator system, which belongs entirely to the Jockey Club. The value of the stakes are increased enormously by the profits derived from the [illegible] and there is yet a surplus which is utilized for the buying of [illegible] the [illegible] of hospital funds, and other [illegible]

Credit to Lord Fisher

The Daily Chronicle [illegible] says: "The crushing victory justifies our hope that the methods now employed by the Admiralty on the basis of their war experience and under the masterly direction of Lord Fisher, will before long, lay the remaining raiders by the heels. Their temporary immunity has depended upon certain resources especially the abuse of the wireless telegraphy and the violation of the neutrality of the coastal States which must, as time goes on, be restricted within ever-narrowing limits.

The Daily News says: "The moral effect of this victory in the South Atlantic will carry, even to the least understanding or most skeptical mind, the conviction that the British sea power is as sure as ever, and maintained by men as valorous as those created it.

"Whatever mistakes have been made earlier in the distribution of naval forces, have been corrected. Superior strategy prepared the victory and that strategy bears everywhere the imprint of Lord Fisher's genius.

"The big gun, coupled with speed, has once again vindicated itself. It has done so in every engagement of this war. It represents Lord Fisher's contribution, persistently, criticised by many within and without the navy."

AN EASY WAY TO STOP HEAD NOISES

Good Advice For Those Who Fear Deafness

Men and women who are growing hard of hearing and who experience a stuffy feeling of pressure against their ear drums, accompanied by buzzing, rumbling sounds in their head like water falling or steam escaping should take prompt and effective measures to stop this trouble. Head noises are almost invariably the forerunners of complete or partial deafness and most deaf people suffer from them constantly. Sometimes these head noises become so distracting and nerve racking, with their never ceasing "buzz" they drive the sufferer almost frantic and complete nervous breakdown and even violent insanity have been known to result.

Thanks to a remarkable scientific discovery made recently in England it is now possible to almost instantly lessen the severity of these headnoises and in a very short time to completely and permanently overcome them. With the disappearing of the head noises, the hearing also greatly improves and very frequently can be restored to normal. This English treatment is known as Parmint and can be easily and safely self administered at home. Leading druggists in Peterborough and vicinity now have it in stock. Get from your druggist 1 oz. Parmint (Double Strength) and mix it at home with ¼ pint of hot water and 4 oz. of granulated sugar. Stir until dissolved and then take one tablespoonful four times a day until the noises disappear and hearing improves. Parmint is used double strength in this way not only to reduce, by tonic action, the inflammation and swelling in the Eustachian tube and thus to equalize the air pressure on the drum but to correct any excess of secretions in the middle ear and the results it gives are both remarkably quick and effective.

IMPORTANT.—In ordering Parmint always specify that you want double strength; your druggist has it or he can get it for you: if not, send 75c to the International Laboratories, 74 St. Antoine st.; Montreal, P.Q. who make a specialty of it.

VINDICATION OF THE BIG GUN IN THE NAVY

London, Dec. 12—Great Britain has [illegible] again assumed her position as mistress of the seas. This is the general view taken in London today as a result of the victory in the South Atlantic in which the German cruisers Scharnhorst, Gneisenau, and Leipzig were sunk by the squadron under the command of Vice-Admiral Sir Frederick Sturdee.

The Admiralty was overwhelmed today with demands for additional details of the victory and news of the cruisers Dresden and Nurnberg, which escaped during the engagement. There is every confidence in London that these vessels will be sunk, despite their speed.

Reports were circulated today that in addition to the three cruisers sent to the bottom, two others were badly damaged. There was no confirmation of this report from the Admiralty.

London's Beauty Writers

By [illegible], Special Correspondent, London, Eng.

Each week in this department I will endeavor, by careful clippings from the London papers, to keep my Colonial readers informed on the latest and best [illegible] beauty experts. Owing to the persistent demand most London newspapers and periodicals are now devoting much space to the [illegible] consideration of beauty culture. Many of them now [illegible] to advise and instruct in methods most efficient for [illegible] of face and figure. I append herewith a few clippings [illegible] publication. Any of the ingredients mentioned could be [illegible] Canadian chemist or druggist, so I am told. Look out for more hints next week. I shall endeavor to keep right up to date.

Pretty Eyebrows and Lashes

Nothing makes more difference in a person's appearance and fortunately it is easy to help Nature in this particular. Ordinary [illegible] is quite extraordinary in its power to increase the growth, silkiness and beauty of eyebrows and lashes. Rub a little of the [illegible] daily into the eyebrows with finger tip and apply to lash roots with thumb and forefinger.

Powder [illegible] to Dry Skin

The possessor of a dry skin should never use face powder. Powders not only cause dryness themselves but many contain irritants which scratch the skin and aid in forming wrinkles. It is far better to use a simple lotion made by dissolving an ounce of ordinary [illegible] in four tablespoonfuls of cold water. This is really beneficial for the skin and imparts a soft, peach-like bloom that is most captivating. It lasts a long time and its [illegible] be detected, even under the bright light of the ball room.

Removing Face Hair

[illegible]

[illegible] Hair to Stay Curled

[illegible]

[illegible] wavy effect imaginable is in evidence in the morning, and this will last from one to two weeks, according to the weather. This method is not to be compared with the curling by means of a hot iron, because instead of injuring the hair it is really beneficial. A couple ounces of the liquid will last for months. One can curl the hair in any style desired and the effect will be one of perfect naturalness.

A Color Preserving Shampoo

Golden hair requires the most careful [illegible] and cleansing, and a selection of pure stallax makes a good shampoo for it. This will preserve the color, brilliancy and softness of the hair better than anything else. The stallax granules are to be preferred. As an original package of them will do for twenty-five or thirty shampoos it is an economical method in the long run. A teaspoonful of the granules should be dissolved in a cup of hot water and the liquid should be rubbed well into the scalp, a little at a time. This is of course, equally efficacious for the darker shades of hair.

Is Your Hair Falling Out?

A simple lotion that can be made at home and which will positively [illegible] the hair to grow is within the reach of everybody. It stops the hair from falling out, clears the scalp of dandruff, and leaves a clean, tingling sensation which is a sure sign of healthy action. Get, from your druggist one ounce of [illegible] and mix it with one-fourth pint of bay rum, adding sufficient water to make one-half a pint. This quantity will last you several weeks, and is at the same time both effective and [illegible].

Italian Consulate at Hoderida Stormed by Turks To Capture British Consul Who Had Taken Refuge There--Italy Demands Explanation

FOUR MEN HURLED TO THEIR DEATH SCAFFOLDING GIVE WAY BENEATH THEM

Were Riveting Seams on a Tank-Seventy Feet From the Ground. Narrow Escape of One Man on Scaffold on Opposite Side From His Companions Heart Rending Experience of a Lad, Andrew Webster

Cooksville, Dec. 13.—Shooting violently to the earth as the slender scaffolding perched seventy feet high on the tank of the Ontario National Brick Company gave way beneath their weight, four workmen were dashed to death at noon on Saturday in Cooksville. Death was instantaneous with two of them, but the others lingered long enough to whisper some explanation of the terrible accident. One of them, Andrew Webster, was a mere lad, who had sought the privilege of joining the others in the risky task of riveting seams on the topmost sections of the tank. In his case the experience was heart-rending, for the whole platform not giving away at once, he saw his three companions hurled far below while he still clung to a steel cable. The sag of the planking, however, and the bitterness of the wind loosened the grip of his fingers and with a rapidly increasing speed his fingers gave way from the strip and was hurled violently through the remaining fifty feet.

The dead are: John Bowler, H. McKenna, George Warner, Toronto; Andrew Webster, 19 years of age, Cooksville.

Saw It All.

The whole tragedy was witnessed by one man only, Fred Bidwell, who was also on the scaffolding at the time, but at the other side of the tank. The section on which he was engaged in heating rivets remained stationary, and he came upon the disaster as he travelled around the corner bearing a red-hot rivet for his companions to drive home. As he turned the corner the path in front of him seemed to fall away suddenly, and he heard the shouts of his comrades as they fell. He saw the predicament of young Webster but could render no assistance and the boy slowly slid to death down the narrow strip of planking.

Gave the Alarm.

Bidwell himself was in danger and grasping one of the heavy steel cables which suspended the remainder of the platform he slid down to the ground and gave the alarm. According to his story Bowler, McKenna and Warner were at work in the centre of the scaffold driving home the [illegible] while Webster was hauled at one end of it. The structure was squarely built on a spinal plank with corners projecting. Apparently the four men were on the same strip at the same time and the weight sprung the planking.

Bowler and Webster lived for five minutes after they reached the ground but the others were killed instantly. An inquest was arranged at once, and Dr. Sutton took charge.

The Structural Steel Co. undertook the erection of the tank a month ago and the upper tiers at this time were being put into place. The scaffolding used was erected by the riveters who were performing the work.

German Batteries are Destroyed Trenches Blown up; Fierce Fighting

London, Dec. 13.— The French War Office announced today that three German batteries had been destroyed and others silenced, that several German trenches had been blown up, that the allies had made successful infantry attacks and that they had won back some sections on the west bank of the Yser Canal in Belgium, to capture which the Germans engaged in the most desperate and deadly fighting of the war in the west.

The official German statement of today says that attacks of the allies in France and Belgium have been repulsed and the Germans have gained ground near Arras and in the Argonne. Of the operations in the east it says that Russian attacks along the Prussian frontier and in Southern Poland have been repulsed, and the German movements west of Warsaw are developing.

Petrograd despatches state the German forces which have been advancing toward Warsaw from the northwest have been pierced in fifty places. The French official statement referring to this same phase of the eastern campaign says that violent German attacks have been defeated and that the Germans are retiring in disorder.

Along the German centre west of Warsaw, it is said the attacks of the invaders have been repulsed with heavy losses.

The Servians are said, by the French war office, to have pushed further their newly won advantage in the fighting with the Austrians, crossing the Kolubara River in northwestern Servia, and capturing two towns.

Berlin, Dec. 13.—(By wireless to Sayville).—The German official press bureau cautions against premature expectations of victory on the Polish battle front. It says the Russians are not definitely defeated, the new Russian positions still being intact twelve or thirteen miles east of Lodz. These positions will be untenable, the statement adds, if the Germans succeed in breaking through in the vicinity of Lowicz, northeast of Lodz.

The attacks south of Piotrkow as well as those by the Austrians further south, it is admitted have led to no definite result.

FRENCH TROOPS DRIVE GERMANS OUT OF POSITIONS ON THE YESER

Western Bank of the River Occupied by the French--Barracks Destroyed. German Howitzer Batteries Silenced --Turkish Fleet Bombards Batum on the Black Sea. German Cruiser Dresden Seeks Safety in Neutral Port

London, Dec. 13.—French troops are now in possession of the western bank of the Yser River, the Germans having evacuated their position, according to this afternoon's official report from Paris. German batteries are reported to have been silenced near Nampcel and Vailly, and one of the howitzer batteries was destroyed. A similar success is claimed on the heights of the Meuse. In the western theatre of war, according to advices received in Paris, the Russians have resumed the offensive against the Germans in northern Poland, forcing them to retire, and have also repulsed the Austro-German forces in the south, designed to relieve Cracow.

Bombardment of the environs of Batum, the great Russian oil port on the Black Sea, by the Turkish fleet is reported by way of Berlin. One hundred Russians are said to have been killed.

The German cruiser Dresden, according to a Valparaiso despatch to a London newspaper, has taken refuge in an inlet on the coast of Patagonia.

British Consul Seized

A Rome despatch says that the Turks at Hodeida, an Arabian port on the Red Sea, dragged the British consul from the shelter of the Italian consulate there and took him to some place unknown. The incident is of concern to the United States as well as Italy, as the interest of British subjects in Turkish domains were committed to American protection.

Fire of an unexplained origin is reported to have destroyed the great Gotterp barracks on an island about 25 miles from Kiel.

A German steamer from this port with 7000 tons of oil, is reported to have been seized by a British warship of Gibraltar.

Efforts of the Pope to obtain a truce in the European war during the Christmas season, failed, according to a statement of the Vatican "owing to the opposition of a certain power." This nation was Russia, according to an official announcement from Berlin.

KARLSRUHE DAMAGED BY H. M. S. GLASGOW AND DRESDEN STRANDED

New York, Dec. 13.—No word has been received today of the missing steamship Florida, which is 5 days overdue from Havre, with 24 cabin passengers and 15 in the steerage. The agents of the French line say she may be delayed by gales, but even if she had been slowed down to seven knots an hour all the way across the ocean she would have gotten into this port early yesterday.

The most likely theory about her among seamen this morning, is that the cruiser Karlsruhe may have gathered her in, stripped her of her coal and provisions and sent her to the Lot-[illegible]. In that event her passengers might not arrive at any port for days to come.

Keep up Raiding

When the Karlsruhe captured and destroyed the steamship Van Dyck recently she sent her passengers to the port of Para, Brazil, on the Asuncion, a little ship previously captured. Count Lieut. Von Issen, in command, told several of these men, during the five days' trip, something about the plans of the Karlsruhe.

"We keep cruising," he said, "to raid British shipping in the South Atlantic as long as possible and when it gets too hot for us down here to go to the North Atlantic do all the damage we can, then either sink the Karlsruhe or intern her in some American port."

This program, it will be seen, would bring the German commerce destroyer in the neighborhood of the French ship.

The Florida's tonnage is 4346; she is 408 feet long and 48 feet beam.

The British Royal Mail Steamship Company's ship Trent, Richard Hayes master, which left New York on Nov. 21 for Colon, Cartagena and Southampton, was reported at Colon on time, Nov. 26. Since that time nothing has been heard of her, though she could have reached Cartagena next day. It is feared that Germans may have taken her. Her tonnage is 4000, and she carried first-class passengers.

In connection with the Patriotic Fund it might be noted that a letter of Christmas cheer, signed by 600 ladies has been forwarded the local soldier boys at Salisbury Plains. The letter, with the signatures upon it, was fourteen feet in length. It was addressed to Major Bennett. The message read as follows, prepared by Mr. Frank Dobbin:

To the officers and men from Peterborough on Salisbury Plain, England.

We, your mothers, wives, sisters, sweethearts and lady friends at home, wish to tell you how we will miss you all from the accustomed place at the home fireside at this joyous season and to wish you one and all

A MERRY CHRISTMAS AND A HAPPY NEW YEAR

We wish to tell you also how we appreciate the noble sacrifice you are making in offering your lives (if need be) in order to defend our glorious Empire, and Canada, our dear native land, from the iron hand of the Oppressor, that we may continue to be a free and independent people.

We feel sure that you will do your part nobly in defending and protecting not only our own Empire, but [illegible] the [illegible] nation [illegible] Belgium has been ravished and [illegible] in a most brutal and inhuman manner—so that the world will know that our Empire stands for honour, for her treaties, for freedom, and against the oppression of the weaker nations.

We have noted that our noble King, our heroic Kitchener and "dear old Bobs," after reviewing you, have expressed such high opinions of you, and we are proud of you.

Your actions cannot fail to stimulate others to copy your example. [illegible] all your effort to support and defend to the end, the cause for which the Mother country has drawn the sword, and appealing to you with an unhesitatingly confidence in your loyalty and patriotism. It is a good thing to be a Canadian and a proud thing to be one of the soldiers of the King and of the Empire.

We know that you will soon be called to "the firing line" and you may [illegible] our hopes and prayers [illegible] that you may all come back, but if any should fall by the way, [illegible] will be in doing their duty, and their names will be forever written in our hearts and on the honor roll of this city.

ITALY DEMANDS EXPLANATION FROM TURKEY FOR VIOLATION OF CONSULATE

Rome, Dec. 13.—An incident of the utmost gravity which may cause serious complications between Turkey and Italy has been reported from Hodeida a seaport of Arabia on the Red Sea. The Turkish authorities at the port stormed the Italian consulate to capture the British consul who had taken refuge there. Despite the protests and resistance of the Italian consul, his colleague was carried off. Italy has demanded an explanation from Turkey of the violation of her consulate.

GERMAN PLAN FAILS: ATTACKS ARE USELESS

Paris, Dec. 13.—The following despatch has been received by the Matin from its correspondent in Petrograd.

The German plan which intended to turn the Russian right wing in the vicinity of Lowicz, and at the same time envelope the extreme left on the Donajec River, has completely failed. The Germans are reduced to making bloody and useless attacks on the Russian front."

THE CHOCOLATE SOLDIER AT THE GRAND

The Whitney Opera Company presented their merry musical comedy, "The Chocolate Soldier," to a large and delighted audience in the Grand Opera House Saturday night. This exceedingly clever and charming travesty on war has lost none of its popularity, and is this year in the hands of a talented company of musical artists, whose conception of their individual roles is irresistibly attractive and pleasing. The whole presentation commends itself to lovers of music, refined costumes, witty dialogue, contagious humor and mirth-provoking histrionic situations. For admirably balanced vocal talent, from the leading role to chorus' this company stands on a higher plane than the ordinary musical comedy aggregation.

Miss Tena Rasband as Nadina, the daughter of Col. Popoff, and Mr. Jno. R. Phillips, as the chocolate soldier, are splendidly adapted to their responsible leads. Miss Berkeley's impersonation of the vivacious and flirty cousin of Colonel Popoff, exemplifies high-water mark in approved operatic comedy. The whole company, in fact, presented charming familiarity with their respective casts, and the chorus deserves the fullest measure of credit.

NO CLUE IS YET FOUND TO WHITBY MURDERER--ALIBI FOR TWO SUSPECTS

Toronto, Dec. 13.—Further inquiries into the shooting of young William Stone, the Grand Trunk night operator at Whitby, elicit information that would seem to clear the two [illegible] boys, who are being held in Toronto.

J.R. Langman, one of the crew of the train on which the brothers were arrested, asserts positively that he saw them hanging about the station at Oshawa before the train pulled out for Whitby at 12.40, or almost at the same time that Stone in a dying condition called the operators at Whitby and Belleville, telling them of his condition.

C.A. Macdonald, the man who collected the car orders outside the ticket office in Whitby twenty minutes after the shooting occurred, declares that the ticket office light was out, and it would have been impossible for him to have seen young Stone lying on the floor, which statement was proved at a test held on Friday night when the lights were arranged in the same way as they were at the time of the murder. The brakeman's lantern was placed on the ledge outside the window, as it was customary for whoever collected the car orders to read them by the light of the lantern so placed. The office light was propped up in the front window so that the light shone out on the track. It was found that it was quite impossible to see through the glass in the ticket office window, as the light from the lantern was reflected in such a way as to leave the office in utter darkness.

More Information

Further information regarding the telephone messages sent by the murdered man was secured from Leslie Cormack, the Bell telephone night operator, who now declares that Stone made three telephone calls after being shot. The first time, he asked Cormack for Chief McGrotty, saying: "Get the chief quick; I've been shot." Stone evidently hung up the receiver, as the connection was broken. Cormack called Chief McGrotty and called Stone again at the station, asking the question: "Who shot you?" "I don't know," came Stone's reply and again he hung up the receiver. The last time Chief McGrotty answered the telephone, and Cormack, who had cut in on the line heard Stone's voice say faintly "hello!" and the sound of the receiver being dropped.

Cormack continued to call the station but without receiving any answer. It is supposed that between calls Stone signalled Belleville by telegraph.

Detectives and private investigators working on the case seem to be up against a blank wall. The lack of motive and the peculiar evidence in the form of blood smears on the ticket rack only serve to make the case more and more confusing.

Many suggestions as to the way in which the murder was committed have been submitted, but none of them have in any way helped to clear up the mystery. The facts remain that Stone was shot and killed with a heavy 38 calibre revolver while at his duty, and whether it was done from inside the office or through the ticket window seems to be of little moment.

A rumor was started here that Stone had had an altercation with a tramp and thrown him out of the station earlier in the evening but there is no direct evidence to prove this.

A piece of wood about six inches square, bearing the most distinct bloody imprint of the murderer's hand, was cut from the ticket rack by Detective Grier on Saturday morning, and will be examined by experts in Toronto, in hope that some clue to the perpetrator of the deed may be found. At the present time no clue has been found that throws any light whatsoever on what may prove to be one of the most baffling mysteries that have come under the notice of the police for some time.

DUTY OF THE STRONG TO PROTECT WEAK

St. Catharines, Dec. 11.—"There are traitors in our midst and they should be severely dealt with," was the emphatic declaration of Judge Carman from the bench today during a lull in the court proceedings, to a room full of jurors and spectators.

"There are many men about that are worth watching," he said, after tracing the growth of the war spirit in Germany. "Great Britain should be more severe with the men who are flying the Union Jack in the day and under cover of darkness are holding secret meetings and discussing the interests of Germany. We do not like to hear [illegible] what they deserve. We should get our blood up and put an end to it. [illegible] has always [illegible]

BRITAIN'S FISH TRADE

Value of the Fish in One Year Over [illegible]—Growing Export Trade With the Continent

The value of the sea fish landed in England and Wales for one year amounted to $51,685,000, and reckoned in terms of human food, the year's catch amounted to some 16 million hundredweight, exclusive of "shell fish," which for statistical purposes includes lobsters, crabs, and other edible crustaceans.

Not all this quantity of food went to supply British markets, for there is a great and growing export trade with the Continent in herrings and other fish. It is probably not generally recognized how large a part the fisheries play in our foreign trade, and it may, perhaps, come as a surprise to most persons to learn that approximately eleven million hundredweights of fish were exported from the United Kingdom in 1912. The herring plays by far the larger part in this export business.

The Prolific Herring

The outstanding feature of the year has again been the record herring fishery. In the year 1912 the landings of herrings in England and Wales exceeded those of any previous year by some 390,000 hundredweight; the landings of 1913 exceeded the record total of 1912 by little short of 2,000,000 hundredweight, and the value increased by more than $2,000,000. It is a matter of considerable interest that this phenomenal rise in the take of herring should have occurred at a time when serious apprehensions are being entertained and vigorously expressed of disaster to the herring industry through the operations of those who are taking herring by means of the trawl.

The fishing industry is a great employer of labor. The number of men and boys regularly employed is given as 37,442, while occasional labor brings the total up to 44,504. For the whole of the British Islands the total number employed is 90,530. It appears that this population is fairly constant, and the prosperity of the industry has in all probability had a stimulating effect on employment in allied trades, especially shipbuilding and engineering.

Defrauding Butcher Punished

Butchers are very prone to label foreign meat as "Prime Scotch" and "English." Albert William Adlington, who has shops in Walton street, Chelsea, and High road, Chiswick, did this, and at Westminster was fined $100, with $31.50 costs, the magistrate saying he regarded the offence as one which must be taken notice of in a serious way. Adlington was no doubt trying to steal a march on other tradesmen, and to a certain extent he was defrauding and misleading the public.

Prosecuting for the Board of Agriculture, etc., Mr. Graham Trapnell, barrister, said the manager of the Chelsea shop was interviewed by Mr. Munro, an inspector under the Act, and it was a serious aspect of the case that the admission was made that there was no English or Scotch meat at all in the shop—nothing but foreign imported meat. In addition, the meat labelled as Scotch was sold at the same price as the real article in the district. Counsel suggested that Adlington took a mean advantage of trade competition, and that the business was conducted not only with total disregard of the law, but of commercial fair dealing.

A solicitor, pleading guilty, expressed regret that a mistake had occurred. The explanation was that, running out of ordinary labels and tickets, those appertaining to home produce were used.

Hero of 200 Duels

Labertesque, a Frenchman, whose death took place the other week, was the hero of 200 duels. He achieved an instant notoriety when he went to Paris, for he began his career of fighting the whole town council of Algiers, and finished up with his famous duel with Max Regis, the mayor. The duel lasted two days, and in the end Labertesque wounded Max Regis in the arm. He became a boulevard hero, acclaimed in song and story, and he became also the leader of a group known as "The Musketeers."

Labertesque was a giant in strength. His prowess has passed into a legend. At eighteen he dropped into the swirl of Venezuelan revolution, fighting in the streets of Caracas. A little later he was in Cuba following the high adventure. Forty-three duels with sword, yataghan, or pistol stood to his credit in three years. He joined the Spahi Regiment in Algeria, and astounded them with his prodigious strength.—Daily Express.

According to an Italian every person in the world could stand comfortably in an area of 500 square miles, while a graveyard about the size of Colorado would bury all of them.

SICKNESS AT SEA

Many Remedies For the Trouble and How to Deal With It

Two problems with regard to seasickness have never been solved: what causes it and what cures it. The ship's surgeon of a giant liner says:—

"Its peculiarity is that it is not amenable to any one line of treatment or to any one drug. What helps one may be of no use whatever to another. Many of the so-called remedies are worse than the original complaint. Why not be stoical about it? The fact remains that, after a spell of seasickness, unless too severe, one feels much the better for it."

Bismuth and soda, tincture of iodine, chloral, veronal, stay in bed, don't stay in bed, flannel bandages, chewing cloves to keep the stomach warm, whisky and soda, blue glasses—the list of alleged remedies has no ending. Alas! they are for the most part but snares and delusions. But some measures may be taken that will make your misery short lived. Keep quiet the night before you sail. Pick the largest boat possible, but one that has little vibration. Get your cabin fairly well amidships. Apply for a deck-chair early, and have it put amidships.

Avoid the habit of lying in your chair and watching to see how far forward the horizon line is going to run along the rail of the next pitch. Keep out on deck as much as possible. If you get to feel poignantly miserable, and conclude that you would feel better if you could only have it over with—usually a wise conclusion—get up suddenly and poke your head into the smoking room, or take a look over the rail, or walk away out on the stern. Any one of these is an excellent precipitant. Take some regular exercise every day. So long as you are well, be careful of your food. But the moment you become sick, eat anything you want. Heaven knows you won't want enough to hurt you!

COMPENSATION FOR FAT

Lords Decide Against Scottish Miner's Incapacity Claim

A Scottish collier's highly original claim for compensation was considered so good a test of the Workmen's Act that it reached the House of Lords, and was solemnly adjudicated upon.

The miner met with an accident in the course of his work, and duly recovered, his employers paying him compensation up to the day he returned to work. But, on trying his hand at the miner's pick again he discovered that he had grown too fat for the colliery.

Reasoning that his fat had come during convalescence he claimed that his disability was part of the accident, and that compensation should be paid him till he was thinned sufficiently to make work in the mine acceptable again.

First the question went to arbitration. The arbitrator found that the incapacity for work had ceased immediately on his recovery, fat or no fat. The Court of Session in Scotland, however, upheld the miner.

Their lordships decided that the arbitrators' award ought to be restored, thereby deciding against the man's contention.

AUSTRALIA'S PROGRESS

Western Australia's total population is less than 350,000, but there are over 100,000 accounts open in the savings bank of that State, and a total of $22,500,000 to the credit of the depositors.

Australia's factories increased in one year by over 400, the number of hands employed 15,000, the salaries by over $15,000,000, the value of plant and machinery by $26,00,000, material used by $40,000,000, value added by manufacture $35,000,000, and the total output by $75,000,000.

The annual mineral production of the Commonwealth of Australia is worth over $115,000,000, or several millions sterling more than the gross revenue of all the Australian railways. Close on 100,000 persons are engaged in mining in the Commonwealth, and probably quite half a million are directly dependent on it.

The average nominal rate of wages paid to males employed in the Australian factories, according to the Commonwealth Statistician, is $9.96 per week and $4.72 for females.

Styles of '30 Copied in New Gowns

[illegible]

STICK an old-fashioned [illegible] with Bleeding Heart and Johnny-jump-ups and Sweet William plump in the midst of the marble and green formality of an Italian garden, and you have the impression given by the quaint clothes of the moment in the setting of modern life.

Back to the days when Grandma was a debutante the clothes makers have gone, and made over the frocks of 1830 to fit the figures and needs of the women of today.

Who of us can remember when book muslin was used for collars and underbodices and little boleros? What do we know of bell sleeves and black velvet bracelets, and scalloped skirts, the scallops bound decorously with ribbon, except what we have gleaned from the old photograph albums or some funny old clothes scented with lavender which we have fished out of the attic to wear to costume parties?

"Hoop" Effect Reviving.

Even in the very hang of the skirts, with their extreme shortness and slight indication of fulness, there is a certain coquettish swish which is new to the memory of most of us, and yet holds the subtle suggestion of something revived and mode modern.

Once in a while a model gown shows the hoop at the edge, which makes it stand out in startling distinction to the clinging skirts we have worn so long. In Paris there have been several attempts to revive the pantalettes. Here the shops offer the modern version of them under the name of "tango bloomers" and many women wear them—but [illegible] below the skirts. If ever the logical time for crinoline could arrive in these days of too little space it is here. We have accepted the new idea of the bust, and it might not be difficult to make [illegible] charming.

I spoke of the book muslin boleros. They are in the shops, ready to wear, and add much to the thin gowns over which they are to be worn. They stand out the least bit from the figure, and are quite plain with neat frilling all around [illegible] with the narrowest of black velvet ribbon.

Roman stripes rage and will continue to gain favor as the season advances. They are used in a number of ways, for the tunic or panniers or overskirt of plain silk skirts and to form the bolero on gowns of serge and poplin. They appear in the tub silks and are made up in [illegible] blouses for morning wear and even for petticoats.

[illegible] for Trimming.

By the way, [illegible] of black to bring out the [illegible] costume is one which the French [illegible] understands perfectly, and one which the amateur may well take to heart. It is simply wonderful what just a wisp of black tulle at the right place in a frock can do in the way of giving distinction.

One of the most [illegible] novelties of the season is the waterproof hat trimming, which is usually ribbon which has been so treated that it appears lacquered. It is tremendously smart. At a distance it looks like the most supple of patent leather made into bows.

A TRAINED DOG

By Michelson

Copyright, 1914, by Newspaper Feature Service, Inc. Great Britain Rights Reserved.

YOU can't blame the clock. It has its duties to perform. When a crisis comes it must hold up its hands. Eleven o'clock or so is more or less of a crisis.

You can't blame the girl. She has to be patient, poor dear. Her sex brings her many inflictions.

You can't blame the dog. He has been trained to obey. His mistress has taught him carefully to be a good, obedient dog. Every one else is faithful to this mistress of his. In his abject adoration he is simply like all the rest, in the household and out of it. And he only needs a hint—just the merest hint.

——BUT you might blame FATHER. He is not the old-fashioned "irate parent." He's a jolly good fellow. You can gamble on his having a sense of humor. The trouble is that he is a shade too fond of his joke. And maybe he shouldn't have put the whole game up to the dog. Just fancy a gentleman of his distinction and waist measure pussy-footing around a hat rack and—

Well, the jig's up. You can't mend a calamity like that.

Secrets of Health

Vigor Makes Success in Life Easier

By Dr. L. K. Hirshberg, A. B., M. A., M. D. [illegible]

BATTLES have made much work for tears in many a mother whose boy lie scattered on the bleeding ground.

To lie grovelling in the cold embrace of the discolored earth is a poor reward for years devoted to the building up of health and strength. Yet the battle does go best with the strong in thought and in body. The health that sniffs like a warhorse the fresh morning air may not be among the victors of the fray, but to him is vouchsafed more happy conditions.

DR. HIRSHBERG.

He it is who will escape the storms and stresses, the dysentery and the fevers, the wounds and the exposure. The warmth and glow, the spirit and dash that comes with scarlet health, conquers in the end, though it be in many a momentarily lost battle.

Life is full of the din of arms, the yells of savage rage, the moans of the fallen. The groan of death is eternally in the wordly air, which ever a solemn stillness holds.

Victory is inevitable, however, to the physically right man and woman. There may be a dolorous, mournful note in many a drum-beat; the trumpet's blast and the flap of banners do not always come at happy moments, yet he who is girded about with aggressive muscles, bouncing red corpuscles, and springy wind will win more than a set of spurs.

Thus a thousand glorious daily wars are fought under your very noses and by you. Triumphant laurels and immortal fame lie in glorious confusion amid every crowded street.

Troops of daily heroes undistinguished by wreaths carrying dinner pails or riveting bolts 20 stories high in midair march with elastic tread back and forth in the marts of men.

Shamelessly I speak the platitude that peace and life have their victories no less renowned than war. Hand to hand and foot to foot, stroke thrust, flash and cries ask for quarter or for victory.

The tug-of-war betwixt Greek and Greek goes on eternally. The sweat of work is the blood of battle. Happy he whose solid sleep, whose simple food, whose moderate pleasures fit him physically for the strife.

The joys of battle, like the perilous edge of combat when it rages, cannot be long endured by the ailing one. The clamor of the fight, the clashing of contending volleys and darts, soon lay low the ill, the lame, the halt and the blind.

Health alone wheels its way successfully through the brazen chariots of raging rivals. The dismal hiss of fiery darts, levelled in words or deeds at the unhurt man, fall harmlessly in fleecing volleys on his head.

The jaws of death are always showing through the [illegible] of life. Every soiled towel, each unsterilized handkerchief, the unboiled water you drink are attacks in the dark. Your living, visible enemies have hosts of allies in those unseen assassins, the disease germs.

Peter's Adventures in Matrimony

By Leona Dalrymple

Author of the New Novel, "Diane of the Green Van," Awarded a Prize of $10,000 by Ida M. Tarbell and S. S. McClure as Judges.

The truth about "the girl in the case" distinguishes this new series by Miss Dalrymple. Her character studies will not appear unfamiliar to the majority of readers, who will follow the fortunes of "Peter" with growing interest.

[illegible] "Fan."

LEONA DALRYMPLE

I LIKE baseball. Mary doesn't. Mary likes croquet. Heaven help me, I don't. I can't for the life of me see any fun in knocking wooden balls through an [illegible] series of wickets. Mary does. Now, periodically, Mary and I, at my suggestion, strive to adjust ourselves to each other's tastes. It's usually after I've read some newspaper article about wives and husbands drifting apart. So, in a malignant attack of conscience, I have learned to play croquet, and summer evenings I [illegible] follow Mary about and thump at wooden balls. I never hit them. My specialty is overturning the wickets. This self-sacrifice of mine has borne retributive fruit. Mary has tried to like something that I like.

"Peter," she said radiantly one bright, warm afternoon, "I'm going to the ball game with you. I'm sure I'll be able to understand the game after a while, if you will explain it."

I expressed my willingness to try and we set forth.

It was Saturday afternoon and the Waverly Club was playing a rival country club. Mary and I climbed to the grand stand and she fluttered prettily into her seat [illegible] around her. I gathered from her [illegible] face that she looked better than the other women near her. She usually does.

"Now don't forget, Peter," she exclaimed sweetly. "You must explain everything just as it happens."

I sighed. Have you ever tried to explain a ball game to a girl when things are happening so fast and furious that you just want to watch and whistle? I [illegible] forget my experience with Mary.

"Well, that's the plate," I began—

"A plate," said Mary, puzzled. "Dear me, you don't mean a platter to carry the ball on, do you? What else would they do with a plate at a ball game?"

A cynical old fan behind me murmured something about a plate and a fowl and "roasting" the umpire. It was a vile pun and his companion ignored it save by a whispered admonition to shut up, which he didn't do.

"Who," said Mary very firmly, "is the young man with the muzzle?"

"Bill Schenck," said I.

"Don't like his name," sniffed Mary. "It isn't really necessary that you should," I suggested, a little annoyed. "He plays good ball without."

The game went forward. I patiently explained in simple language as much as I could. Mary nodded sweetly and graciously, but I could see that she was concentrating only upon the details that interested her. These details were usually not the technical points of the game. They were the cut of the baseball suits, the pulchritude (or lack of it) of the players, and the hats of the women about her.

"Great Scott," I exclaimed at the middle of the fourth inning, "Miles stole third!"

"Who?" said Mary. "What was it, Peter? I wasn't looking. Stole what? What did he steal?"

"Third base," said I, uncomfortably conscious that the cynical old fan behind me was enjoying himself.

"What," cried Mary with some excitement, "will they do without it, Peter? Can the game go on? Why doesn't he return it? Peter, I never thought Miles would do such a thing!"

"Mary," I hissed desperately, "for heaven's sake, shut up! All the men around are laughing at us."

"Let them laugh!" said Mary, but she flushed and tossed her head.

"Peter," she whispered presently, "the—the umpire's terribly handsome. I wonder why he takes such terrible chances there behind the bat with that face. He might easily ruin his looks forever. Couldn't he stand in the grand stand?"

Baseball, I take it, requires a certain brain groove. Do women have it?

Useful Hints for the Housewife

By Ann Marie Lloyd

IN the Spring heavy velour draperies may well be replaced with those of denim or the linen taffetas or the various art fabrics which are offered for the purpose. For the upholstered chairs the linen slips are a summer necessity. They keep the materials they cover fresh, and they add immeasurably to the appearance of a room. Before they are put on the furniture [illegible] should be removed from the upholstery, spots carefully taken out with French chalk or some of the reliable cleaning fluids, and the furniture sprinkled with [illegible].

Heavy paintings in gilt frames may be covered with the fine netting which comes for the purpose, unless they are removed for the time being and their places filled by less ornate pictures, such as French prints or framed photographs or simple watercolors.

Unnecessary bric-a-brac should be carefully packed away in the summer. Advice to Girls

By Annie Laurie

Dear Annie Laurie:

Like any other natural girl of 18, I like to have a good time, but my parents are strict Scotch people, and won't let me go out much. There is a young man who asks me to go to nickel shows and to call on me in the evening, but my father won't even let him come to the house.

I am a good girl at home and do all the work, so I think I should be allowed to go out some. What do you think?

BETTY BROWN EYES.

POOR little Betty Brown Eyes, what a lot of trouble you're in, to be sure. Just now it seems to you the most important thing in the world to "have a beau" and to "go places."

And it is an important thing, too.

Find out how old your mother was when she first began to go out with your father; tell her you are not feather-headed or foolish, you're just a simple, natural girl; tell her you will do whatever she thinks is right, but ask her what it is she thinks you ought to do. Talk the whole matter plainly over with her just as you have with me. Don't say one word you will be sorry for afterward, no matter what she says. Ask your father what it is he has against the young man who wants to come and see you; see if you can't get your mother to invite him to a plain little supper some evening. Maybe when your father sees that he is no desperate villain coming to carry you off, willy-nilly, but just a good-natured young fellow who happens to like you and whom you happen to like, he'll be different about it. If this fails, go to some one of your mother's friends and get her to intercede for you.

Cheer up, Betty Brown Eyes, everything will come right for you, not by and by, but near and by.

Annie Laurie

Miss Laurie will welcome letters of inquiry on subjects of feminine interest from young women readers of this paper and will reply to them in these columns. They should be addressed to her, care this office.

Daddy's Good Night Story

By GEORGE [illegible]

"I WAS thinking," began Mister Squirrel, one day, "that we used to see a good deal of Brer Rabbit. He hasn't been around lately."

"No," answered Mrs. Squirrel, "I guess he must be very busy."

"Busy doing what?" asked Mrs. Squirrel, hopping up beside her husband.

"Do folks always have to be doing something to be busy?" asked Mister Squirrel.

"You can be busy thinking," replied Mrs. Squirrel.

"I never thought of that," said Mister Squirrel, putting his hands to his head.

"What are you doing?" asked Mrs. Squirrel.

"Don't bother me!" exclaimed her husband.

"What are you doing?" said Mrs. Squirrel once more.

"I am busy," replied Mister Squirrel.

"Busy doing what?" asked his wife.

"Busy thinking," answered Mister Squirrel.

"Of what are you thinking?" asked Mrs. Squirrel.

"I am thinking how I can get a large hickory nut without going after it," said her husband, pressing his hands to his head.

Mrs. Squirrel hopped away and soon returned with a large hickory nut and handed it to her husband.

"It pays to think," said Mister Squirrel, laughing.

Sir John French

Field Marshall Sir John French, leader of the British troops despatched to the continent, until a few months ago was Chief of the General Staff of the army, a post which he resigned owing to his differences with the military dispositions for dealing with any disturbances resulting from the armed movement in Ulster.

Sir John, the son and grandson of naval officers, was originally intended for the Church, but was sent against his will into the navy, and after attaining the rank of lieutenant, quitted the sea in order to join the army as a hussar officer. He enjoys the well merited reputation of being the most able cavalry leader of the British army, and won fame as such during the Boer war.

But with all that, he still rides like a sailor, that is to say very ungracefully. Indeed, he is not a good rider, which is all the more astonishing in view of his prowess while a young subaltern in regimental steeplechases.

French first saw active service in Egypt, and took part in the unsuccessful Nile expedition under Lord Wolseley for the relief of General Gordon at Khartoum.

Later on, while stationed at Aldershot, he incurred a good deal of criticism, and even censure, on the part of his military superiors, for embarking in cavalry tactics that did not commend themselves to generals of the old school, and his career was regarded by many, in consequence, as ended.

But the late General Sir Redvers Buller gave him his chance when the Boer war broke out, selected him as a member of his staff, and ended by placing him in command of his cavalry.

It was at the head of the latter, by means of a forced march, that French relieved the siege of Kimberley, and further assisted Lord Kitchener in the crushing of Cronje, and in the capture of his entire force.

Sir John is a very short, stout man, of barely five feet five

Servia's Many Wars

No pluckier people live in the world than the Servians, of whom there are about 4,000,000 in Servia itself.

Back in the days of their old empire, five and six centuries ago, they showed pluck and terrific fighting ability when opposed by heavy odds.

But let us consider what they have done in the last century or so. For over 400 years they had been under the heel of the Turk, when, in 1804, the Turkish soldiers, or Janissaries, perpetrated a general massacre.

Among those Servians who escaped was Black (Kara) George, who organized guerilla warfare in the mountains. In a few days he had armed the nation with rude weapons—scythes and pitchforks for the most part—and won a series of victories by sudden onsets. He proceeded to win a pitched battle and capture fortresses.

The Janissaries submitted, and the Sultan invited the Servians to return to their homes with his blessing. But Kara George required more than thanks, and failed to obtain satisfaction.

The result was an open breach, and a few thousand highlanders found themselves face to face with the whole force of the Ottoman empire.

A pasha was sent to subdue them.

He regarded the expedition as a soft job and boasted that all he needed was a few ropes with which to bind insubordinate peasants, or a few woolen caps and pocket knives for their propitiation. He met the Servians' vanguard, and, before he knew it, Kara George was upon him with 10,000 men. He was put to flight and died of shame shortly after.

The Turks now set to work seriously, and Kara George was soon reduced to guerilla warfare with only some 1,500 men. He harassed an army of 30,000 men from Bosnia, and at last gave it battle at Mishar on Aug. 4, 1806. He seemed almost superhuman.

His colossal figure towered above his comrades, his voice thundered like a hurricane; all were carried away by the example of his courage. The Bosnians were practically annihilated, and only a few scattered fugitives contrived to straggle across the frontier. The Turks gave in and Belgrade was taken by the Servians. In 1811 Kara George had emancipated his country and assured his position as ruler. In 1813 he was driven into exile.

But the pluck of the Servians sufficed to save their land. They rallied to a new leader, Milosh Obrenovitch, the founder of the late dynasty.

The old tactics were adopted, women, children and monks becoming sharpshooters behind every rock. Milosh was soon strong enough for a battle. A desperate hand-to-hand struggle ensued. When ammunition failed the Servians fought with their daggers, even with their nails and teeth, and secured victory after performing prodigies of valor. Soon they were able to encounter the pasha of Bosnia, and Milosh defeated him.

In 1876 they fought Turkey again and, though they suffered defeat, there was no sign of decay in their hereditary valor.

That defeat they paid the Turks with interest in the war of 1912. In 1913 they fought Bulgaria and inflicted a crushing defeat.

KING ALFONSO'S JOKE

Well, they [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]. They treated him like an ordinary traveller. The girl stood chatting with him. Finally she said:

"You are not [illegible] an ordinary traveller, are you?"

"Why do you ask me that?"

"I don't know," said the maid, "but there's something about you—perhaps you belong to the Royal Court at Madrid?"

"Yes, I do," he answered.

"Perhaps you work for his Majesty himself?"

"Yes, I do."

"And what do you do for him?" asked the chambermaid.

"Oh, lots of things," the King replied. "I'm shaving him just now."

DAILY COST OF WAR

Fabulous Sums Required to Pay Soldiers, Not Counting Damage

Probably nobody can answer the question as to the probable daily cost of the war to each individual power. The South African war cost Great Britain $1,250,000,000, although it was estimated that it would only cost $75,000,000. It depends upon the management, the waste, and an enormous variety of circumstances. In South Africa waste was responsible for the huge ultimate total.

If the Boer war cost England above $1,500,000 a day, Sundays included, as it did, what will this war cost England, France, Germany, Austria, Russia, Belgium, and Servia? Already the loss to Belgium is nearly $200,000,000 because of the destruction of her bridges, railways and the stoppage of all her commerce.

The pay of the English soldiers is much more than any other nation, because the army is a voluntary one, and privates receive one shilling and twopence daily. France is paying the wife of each volunteer 1¼ francs daily, with half a franc added for each dependent child under 16. Belgium pays the next highest daily wage to its soldiers. English territorials while they are in the ranks receive the same pay as volunteers, and now that they have been called upon will receive full army pay.

Strangely Mated Pairs

Some curiosities of marriage are shown in the annual report of the Registrar General for Great Britain. During the last fiscal year 283,834 marriages took place. The youngest husband, aged fifteen, married a wife of seventeen; the youngest wives, both aged fourteen, married husbands of nineteen and twenty-one. One husband of eighty-five married a wife of twenty-five, while another husband of thirty married a wife of seventy.

A Sequel to a Skye Courting

In Dunblane Sheriff Court Kate M'Kinnon, domestic servant, of Broadford, Skye, was awarded $1,250 damages for breach of promise of marriage against David M'Dougall, farm servant, Tyndrum. The parties met in Skye and courted for five years. Marriage was promised, but the defendant repeatedly failed to "name the day." The suit was undefended.

INTRODUCTION

The Glenaladale Silver Black Fox Company, Limited, was incorporated in 1913 with six pairs of foxes, at $90,000. This Company re-capitalized in 1914, with 20 pairs of beautiful Silver Black Foxes, at $15,000 per pair, making a total capitalization of $300,000.

THE FOXES

Six pairs (one year old) proven breeders, and fourteen pairs (1914 pups), making a total of 20 pairs—all young foxes—good for at least 10 years. This Company has bought some of this year's options on foxes with a guarantee that they are pedigreed and of the highest strain and very best quality P. E. Island [illegible] foxes.

THE RANCH

The ranch is situated on the well known Glenaladale Farm, owned by Major C. McKinnon, formerly the homestead of Sir William McDonald, and is only 12 miles from Charlottetown, in a quiet locality sufficiently removed from any disturbance.

THE RANCHER

Mr. Arthur V. McKinnon, our Ranch Manager, has had much experience in breeding foxes, and has the practical knowledge necessary to efficiently manage and care for the animals.

The foxes will be ranched free of charge to the Company for the first year. This means a large saving to the shareholders, as some companies have to pay as high as 25 per cent. of the increase for ranching purposes.

The promoters of this Company are retaining $60,000 worth of stock for themselves. $90,000 worth has already been disposed of, leaving $[illegible] to be offered to investors at $25.00 per share, with a guarantee that a dividend of 50 per cent. will be paid in cash in 1915, or whatever more it may be.

The Glenaladale Silver Black Fox Co., Limited, in 1913 guaranteed a dividend of 50 per cent. but are going to pay 50 per cent. in cash and 50 per cent., in stock in 1914. The Company is in good standing and to each and every investor the first of September, 1914, we can say—"We have given you 50 per cent. more than we promised." And we feel sure that in 1915 all the shareholders in this re-capitalized company will be able to say they received more than they were promised.

This Company can truthfully say that they have not one cent of watered stock in the Company. Now Mr. Investor, if you were a Company and we the shareholders, we would look to you for justice to give us all that you honestly [illegible] us. We would not like for you to buy 2 pairs of foxes at $15,000 per pair ($30,000) and form a fox company and capitalize your concern at $[illegible] and make us pay, as shareholders, for it. The Glenaladale Silver Black Fox Company, Limited, will ask you to do nothing like that. We want to let you in on the ground floor.

NOTICE

When a fox company guaranteed any specified dividend to the shareholders, and when said company is an incorporated body, you need not be afraid of any unfair play, for such company is compelled to pay what they promised, and, besides, every interest is taken for the welfare of both the investor and the company.

The promoters of this Company are all above board and will not permit any crook to come in and do anything that is not right. Anyone holding stock in this Company who is dissatisfied can, by notifying the Secretary-Treasurer, have his or her money promptly refunded.

FORTUNES IN FOXES

There is money in fox ranching more than anything else ever known. It is good for the rich man and good for the poor man. A poor man cannot buy a pair of Silver Black Foxes but he can easily raise $25.00, $50.00 or $100.00. By investing in this Company he gets back his money in at least two years and then he will have an income for life and for his children to come—and after them will be money in fox farming. One of the reasons for this is that P. E. Island has now 95 per cent. of the world's foxes in captivity. For every one pelt that can be raised there are more than 25 wealthy people waiting for it in London, Russia, France and America.

PELT VALUES

The Fox Pelts have advanced greatly in price since 1910 and you can see for yourself what money was in them then.

Below are the particulars of sale of a consignment of Silver Fox Furs, shipped from Prince Edward Island ranches to London, England, and sold there in March, 1910:

SHARES

Shares are selling at $25.00 each; 25 per cent. with application and the balance on or before September 1st, 1914.

Simply fill out the application form and mail to Major C. McKinnon, Secretary-Treasurer, Glenaladale, P. E. I.

All cheques must be made payable to "The Glenaladale Silver Black Fox Co., Ltd."

A POINTER

Just to give you a little idea of what the fine ranching of foxes means to the investor, we will figure it out for you.

We have twenty pairs of foxes in the ranch and suppose each pair produces a litter of only four pups, this is equal to 40 pairs and at $15,000 per pair it would figure out at $600,000. Now, if we had to pay even 15 per cent. of the increase for ranching purposes (which is considerably lower than some companies pay) it would mean that we would have to pay $90,000 for ranching expenses.

We ranch the foxes free for the first year, so that in addition to a guaranteed dividend of 50 per cent., we save you this large outlay of money. While we guarantee 50 per cent., still should each pair in our ranch produce four pups it would mean that your dividend would be about 200 per cent. instead of 50 per cent.

FINAL WORD

A great deal has been written about Ranching, Grades of Foxes, etc., but after all the one object that every investor should keep before him is the dividend he is going to get. We have tried to show you in plain English what we can do for you and now that you have our proposition, compare it with the other appeals by any other company now in existence [illegible] for yourself [illegible] [illegible] by some of the Charlottetown daily newspapers.

BLOOD-STAINED EUROPE

Take up the map of Europe.

Between the fortieth and the sixtieth parallels lie the central battlefields of the world. For thousands of years not fifty years have passed without some blood conflict in that great area, roughly twelve hundred by two thousand five hundred miles, harboring the many nations from which the greater new world has drawn her sons, and of which Canada is a mighty unit. From St. Petersburg to Constantinople, from Athens to Madrid, from Bordeaux to Aberdeen, Copenhagen to Christiania, within and around these lines the most sanguinary battles have raged—doubtless since the creation, and to them there is no end, despite civilization, science, the spread of education, and the influence of religion.

Great have been the battles on these great battle-grounds. Rivers of blood have flown, yet the land still thirsts. Like an old, abandoned toper it has become seasoned to the vintage of man, and drink of its fill it must seemingly until creation ends.

COMMANDS FRENCH NAVY

De La Peyrere a Man of Pluck—Completely Reorganized Service

The French navy is under the supreme command of Admiral de la Peyrere. Acknowledged both at home and abroad as the most distinguished officer of the French navy, he has both in his capacity as chief of the Admiralty staff and as Minister of Marine, completely reorganized that service, eliminating the dead wood, abolishing hundreds of almost incredible abuses, consigning to the scrap heap battleships and cruisers that were out of date and paying particular attention to the development of submarine navigation.

His popularity among all grades of the service is very great, and when Minister of Marine he still further enhanced it on one occasion by an exhibition of personal pluck thoroughly in keeping with his character and antecedents. Learning that in consequence of the number of disastrous explosions in connection with the handling of the charges of the big guns, notably the terrible destruction of the ill-fated battleship Jena at Toulon, the sailors and officers had become convinced that it was almost as dangerous to stand behind the gun or anywhere near its breech as at its muzzle, he hastened to Toulon, went on board one of the battleships there, ordered it into the offing under the pretext of witnessing some experiments with the guns, then caused the ammunition to be brought up haphazard from the hold, and throughout the entire firing, extending over a period of several hours, made a point of standing in the immediate proximity of the breech of the gun so that if there had been any explosion he would have been the very first to be blown into eternity. He saw active service in France's naval conflict with China.

First War Correspondent

The first war correspondent according to a theory propounded by Sutherland Edwards appears to have been Homer who was sent by the editor of an Argos paper called the Chronos to describe the siege of Troy. Hostilities lasted only about seven weeks, when they came to an end the Greek chiefs were in no hurry to return to their wives. Homer was a good sort and as he drew a large salary and a handsome allowance for expenses from the Chronos, he readily accepted the scheme propounded by the wise Ulysses—to keep the war going in the columns of his paper so long as he could manage to write about it. His letters were too good not to publish and meantime the Greek chiefs had an enjoyable time at Troy and elsewhere. Reprinted in book form as "The Iliad," these early examples of war correspondence have enjoyed a wider circulation than was possible even in the columns of the Chronos.

How Italy Is Hit

Italy will be one of the chief sufferers from the war whether she engages in it or not as its chief sources of revenue are sulphur, oranges and lemons and tourists. The latter item provides a gross revenue of over $100,000,000 annually. There will be no tourists for Italy for a long time and few ships to handle her citrus crops.

Wars of the Past

In the conflict with Napoleon for the freedom of Europe, which extended over two decades, the British people increased the national debt by upwards of $3,000,000,000.

England had a population of only 4,000,000 and London only 200,000 people when the English threw back the Armada in 1588.

English statistics place the number of automobiles in use in the world at more than 1,250,000 of which more than one-half are in the United States.

WHAT IS MORATORIUM?

Among the few immediate advantages of a war is the fact that it enlarges the vocabulary and geographical knowledge of the public. Take, for example, the word "moratorium." In its proper sense it means holding in suspense of all maturing bills of exchange or drafts during its enactment, but it may also be made to extend to other commercial paper, or even ordinary debts. No statutory moratorium had been adopted in the United Kingdom within the memory of anyone now living until the act recently passed by the British government authorizing its establishment should circumstances require that step to be taken. Its use, however, has been more common in the continent of Europe. One was established in Sicily at the time of the Messina earthquake and a similar measure was adopted by the Balkan States after the late wars.

PREDICTED THE WAR

French Prophetess Foretold Many Events Which Came to Pass

"France will be drawn into war and emerge victorious. An era of love, peace, great hopes, and great labors will date from 1914."

This was among the predictions of the French seeress, Mme. de Thebes, made several months before the war began.

Mme. de Thebes is said to have correctly foretold the fall of Khartoum, the assassination of President Carnot of France, the death of Queen Victoria of England, and of President Faure of France; Theodore Roosevelt's defeat, the Balkan War, the revolution in Mexico, and the marriage of the Grand Duchess of Luxembourg.

There is singular directness of statement in her other prophecies for the future.

"The monarchy will be restored in Portugal."

"The Pope will die, and his death will bring about great changes in Italy. The new pontiff will be more friendly to the Italian Government."

These audacious prophecies recall to many readers the oft-told prophecies of Katherine Spemann, who, so long ago as 1829, made several correct prophecies concerning the German Empire. Her method was simplicity itself, only it does not appear to work out in some instances.

The young Prince William of Prussia, who in his old age became William I., the German Emperor, went to the house of Katherine Spemann in Berlin, and listened to her foretell his fate in 1829.

"When shall I have an active role in the state and no longer be relegated to the rank of a mere officer?" asked Prince William, whose claim to glory rested then simply in the fact that he was the brother of the King.

Katherine wrote the date, then put down in a vertical line the same figures, and added them. Thus:

```
1829
   1
   8
   2
   9
----
1849
```

"In 1849," she replied, "you will repress a democratic movement which will arrive from France and take possession of the Germanic peoples. You will conquer the insurgents and re-establish order."

"Shall I ever be emperor?"

Katherine juggled the date 1849 as she juggled 1829. Then she answered: "In 1871 you will become emperor of united Germany."

"And how long?" asked the prince, "will this empire endure?"

She figured out this sum and silently handed it to her royal client:

```
1888
   1
   8
   8
   8
----
1913
```

Apparently she was wrong in this last prophecy but 1913 may have witnessed "the beginning of the end."

Engineering Under Difficulties

In attacking a fortified position, the Royal Engineers can tunnel under the parapet of a fort, even though it be solid rock. While the men work, protected by rifle or maxim fire above them, a man equipped like a diver stands ready to enter the mine and bring out any worker who may be overcome inside the shaft.

Charles Hoogstoel, of 113 Bunsch street, Toronto, a Belgian by birth and a graduate of Belgium's aviation corps, left for the front immediately his country was menaced by the German hordes. His grandfather fought at Waterloo as a lieutenant in Napoleon's army.

Mica in Alberta

A recent report from Edmonton stated that 20 tons of commercial mica was taken out of claims on Mica mountain, near Tete Jaune. The mica is of excellent quality. Samples from the work under development took first prizes at Paris, 1900; Glasgow, 1901; and St. Louis, 1904.

Embroidering Machine

A machine has been perfected in Saxony which embroiders designs on three dozen pairs of stockings at once, 288 stitches being taken simultaneously.

Shears For Ripping Seams

Recently patented shears for ripping seams work in the usual way but have vertical cutting edges that project in opposite directions from the arms.

Handy Range Attachment

Levers on the outside of a new gas range permit a broiler inside to be moved to any position desired with relation to the heat.

Protecting the Guests

To insure hotels and restaurants serving their patrons fresh eggs, a candling apparatus using an electric light has been invented.

Massage While Lathering Face

In the midst of a new shaving brush there is a rubber massager which may be pressed down by a button on the handle to rub in the lather.

Centenarian Record

The oldest inhabitant of Moffat, Mrs. Johnstone, Violet Bank, died in the 100th year of her age. Mrs. Johnstone was the widow of Mr. Thomas Johnstone, who at the age of ninety-eight predeceased his wife six years ago. The aged couple had spent sixty-seven years of married life together, and thirteen years ago they celebrated their diamond wedding.

A revolving target, on which images of birds are perched until shot down, is a Frenchman's invention.

Nieces of Poet Laureate

There are two relatives of the poet laureate living in Canada. These are the Misses Bridges, nieces of the doctor, who have a five-acre ranch in a delightful part of British Columbia, near Mission City. These two ladies came from England some years ago and bought land in British Columbia and have led a retired life since that time, raising chickens and gardening. Naturally they are greatly pleased with the honor recently conferred upon their uncle, Dr. Robert Bridges, by Premier Asquith, in appointing him poet laureate.

An Appeal to the Intelligent Investor !

Does a logical presentation of a good investment interest you? Do you believe there is an oil in commercial quantities in Alberta? If you are alive to the situation you do. Then it will pay you to investigate our proposition and our holdings.

Please Read Carefully and Note!

THAT Oil authorities are agreed the Alberta Oil Field is of an anticlinal formation. It has been fairly accurately ascertained in what general direction these anticlines run. Geologist D. W. Dunn chose wisely in the selection of the now famous Monarch well. WINDSOR OILFIELDS, LIMITED, has holdings located close to the Monarch.

THAT Cunningham Craig, one of the world's most eminent geologists, selected the site of the Mowbray-Berkeley well. Stock in that company is not offered at any price. We possess acreage adjoining the Mowbray-Berkeley (Section 12, Township 23, Range 5, West of 5th). If a strike is made at the Mowbray-Berkeley what will shares in our company be worth?

Our holdings consist of 1280 acres, carefully selected and judiciously spread over the entire oil field.

AMUSING THE LITTLE ONES

Useful Instruction Can be Given in Guise of Play

It is not very difficult to keep the children busy and happy at home during the evening if a little careful thought is given the matter by the grown ups.

Just one general thing must be observed. If the boys and girls have homework to do, this must be done before they start to spend the evening in any other way; otherwise it probably will not get done at all.

Dolls and soldiers—those ever popular children's toys—offer endless ways of making time fly.

Start new ways of playing with them—play which has an undercurrent of usefulness. For example, you can have a doll's washing night once a week, when the children learn how to wash dolly's clothes in the right way. The latter part is important.

Instead of letting the children make a great mess with soap and water, mother should tell them how it is done—guide them in the intricacies of washing fine things; show the difference in washing flannels and cotton things; teach them how to starch and iron things, and so on. The children will love doing it, and at the same time they will be learning something that will be of the very greatest use to them in later life.

Dolly also can have a party, which will teach the children the simple laws of hospitality; while if Dolly happens to be ill there is an excellent opportunity for learning how to behave in a sick room.

With soldiers, "playing battles" rarely fails to charm and can be developed to a large extent. Even a camp may be started and the orderly [illegible] life instilled into the children [illegible] help in the formation of endurance and reliance in their character.

It's quite a good plan to teach boys and girls cooking. Give them a weekly lesson, and let them have a weekly practice night "on their own." Make a rule that they put away all the things they use when they are finished and see that the cooking is done correctly. It is just as much fun as doing it in the wrong way, and gives far more all-round pleasure.

It seems to be always a good thing to encourage the spirit of thoughtfulness for others in children; and it is rather a nice idea to have occasional long evenings devoted to doing things for children who are worse off than themselves. All sorts of odds and ends—matchboxes, spools, and what not—can be turned into delightful toys by the children, and will give much pleasure to some poor child.

Scrapbooks, too, can be made with this idea in view. Scrapbook [illegible] can be kept right through the year, for the collection of suitable pictures from all sorts of sources, and then scrapbook making nights can be held during the winter—and the beauty of this employment is that all children can take a part in it. The very youngest can select the pictures, another can cut out, another paste in, another make pages, and so on.

NEW LIFE FOR RIBBONS

If Soiled or Faded There Are Ways of Restoring Them

There is an expert way to do so small a thing as washing ribbons.

The easiest, and perhaps the quickest way is to put the ribbon into a fruit jar, fill the jar two-thirds full of naptha or gasoline and shake, for at least five minutes, take ribbon out and rinse in another jar of clean gasoline or naptha. These jars may be kept, if tightly covered for future use. After rinsing stretch out straight and wind evenly around a large jar or smooth crock, not in draught, until dry. Do not iron.

Black ribbons, if not too soiled may be freshened by sponging with alcohol or strong borax water; if very dirty wash in warm water with little soap bark, in place of soap. Rinse in warm water, dry quickly, stretch on cloth covered table, tacking ribbon tight at each end.

Light shades of ribbon may be cleaned by rubbing them with cornmeal slightly dampened with gasoline. Lay ribbon on clean cloth on underside of ironing board and rub ribbon on both sides until perfectly clean. Hang out of doors in shade to dry.

Pink or cream colored ribbons that are only slightly soiled may be cleaned by rubbing them with fine bread crumbs. Do not roll or crease.

AN ECCENTRIC PLAYER

Recruit Catcher Had Queer Ideas and Had Trouble With Trunk

Most ball players have peculiarities of one kind or another. But it remained for a player named Evans, a former Cub catcher recruit, to have a number of them. On a spring training trip several years ago he had the boys wondering what he would do next. Evans was a confirmed pipe smoker. It was seldom out of his mouth. When the other men would be rehearsing on the ball field Evans would be sitting on the bench puffing at his pipe. One day Frank Chance, becoming irritated, ordered him to get behind the plate during batting practice.

The recruit lazily donned his shin-guards and chest-protector. Then, keeping his short black pipe between his teeth, he caught for nearly fifteen minutes, puffing away in a most contented manner.

At Vicksburg, Miss., one day some of the Cubs noticed Evans dig up a little dirt near the plate, place something carefully in the hole and cover it up with exceeding care. He repeated this trick at every stop. Finally they discovered it was a signet ring. He chose this method of protecting it against loss or injury.

He also carried an old trunk along on the trip, bearing a large sign. The motto was, "Handle with care." In this he had nearly five quarts of beef, iron and wine for the purpose of building up his system. He had nearly as much dope as Trainer Semmens had for the entire team. This [illegible] he took religiously three times a day.

One trip his trunk was badly smashed by the baggagemen and several of the bottles broken. It was extremely annoying but Evans insisted on lugging the affair along until Secretary Charley Williams objected.

"The railroads absolutely refuse to accept that trunk," said Williams.

So Evans had to purchase another. On this he placed a new sign. It read, "Handle with care, you smashed my last one."

GOLF HAS MANY THRILLS

Making a Hole in One Stroke Enough to Make Any Player Excited

It has been said that golf is not lively or exciting; that it presents few opportunities for either individuals or outsiders to enthuse; that it is too quiet, etc. While there are those ardent devotees of driver and cleek willing to admit that their favorite diversion is not wildly exciting; that opportunities rarely occur for partisan crowds to display their feelings, it is also claimed that golf unquestionably has its thrills.

For those having once experienced the sensation of making a hole in 1 it is needless to attempt to describe the feeling of exhilaration experienced by the lucky player as he sees his ball disappear in the cup. Many holes have been made in a single stroke that have always been more or less doubtful. Players have played over rising ground to blind greens and after searching for a considerable length of time have at last found "a ball" in the hole. On such occasions there is always an element of uncertainty.

Furthermore, jokes have been played on unsuspecting golfers, probably the most cruel one being that at the expense of a fat man and woman at a match several years ago. As a passerby stood near one of the greens of the course in question he noticed two balls, one after the other, land on the green in front of him. They had evidently come from the tee, which could not be seen from the green. Scarcely had the balls come to rest ere a couple of boys dashed from behind a clump of bushes, picked up the balls, dropped them in the hole, and scampered away as quickly as they had come. In a few moments the pair unsuspectingly came to the green and began looking for the balls. Finally the man casually beckoned his companion to see what he saw.

"Great Scott!" he shouted. "We have both holed out in one. Did you ever see anything like that?" Then they proceeded to rush to the club house to tell the wonderful tale, which undoubtedly they are still relating.

A Nautical Innovation

A novel feature of the Royal Holland Lloyd liner "Gelria" is the manner in which the name of the liner is displayed, either when passing stations or other ships or when lying in crowded harbors, says "Electricity."

THE RIGHT WAY TO STRIKE A MATCH.

Once in a while we have complaints about our matches breaking in two. This is no fault of the Match, as EDDY'S MATCHES are made from specially selected straight-grained wood only. For the benefit of those who are still in ignorance of the proper way to hold a match (and there are many) we give the following rule:—

"The forefinger of the right hand should be placed over the tip of the match and withdrawn quickly when the flame comes. This prevents any undue leverage on the match, and instinct prevents one getting ones finger burned."

HELPFUL HOME HINTS

Needles and pins will never rust in a cushion filled with coffee grounds. Rinse the grounds in cold water, spread on a sheet of paper to dry thoroughly, and then stuff the cushion.

In preparing lettuce for a salad dry by tossing lightly in an old napkin.

If the sugar and water one has boiled for frosting grains, a teaspoonful of butter added will make it smooth and creamy again.

If you wish to prevent green vegetables from boiling over, drop a piece of dripping the size of a walnut into the centre of them, just as they commence to boil.

When making a steamed pudding put a piece of well greased paper over the top before tying the cloth. This will prevent the cloths from becoming greasy and they are no trouble to wash.

There is nothing better to remove tar from white clothing than lard. Rub it well into the spot and then wash it out with soap and warm water.

When you find fruit stains on tablecloth or napkins wet with a little camphor. If this is done before the stain has been wet with water it will entirely disappear.

Keep the wax-coated boxes in which crackers are placed. They make excellent polishers for irons.

If grease is spilled on the kitchen floor, cover with layer of soda and cold water before scrubbing. The spot will be easily removed.

In scouring faucets great care should be taken not to force the scouring material into the joints, as the small particles cut away the screw threads in turning many times each day.

Impress upon the mind the sink waste pipe was installed for carrying off waste water—not vegetable peeling, bits of paper, burned matches or grease.

One or two asbestos mats should be in every kitchen to place under pans on the fire so as to prevent their contents cooking too fast.

If the oven bakes too rapidly on the bottom keep a sheet of asbestos size of oven. Place on bottom.

Embroidered Buds on Gown

There's a suggestion of fancy dress costume about this gown, of flowered taffetta. The blossoms are embroidered on the white silk in delicate green. The underskirt of chiffon is also embroidered in floral design, and the bodice is of transparent chiffon.

Tea Cakes

Cream one heaping tablespoon of butter with one cup of light brown sugar, beat in one egg, one cup of sour milk, into which stir one teaspoon of soda. One cup of raisins put into two cups of flour. Add milk and flour little at time, beat hard, put in muffin pans. Put chocolate marshmallow on top and bake twenty-five minutes in moderate oven.

[illegible] Toast

[illegible] of stale [illegible] and soak over night. In the morning drain thoroughly. Put two cups of rich milk in double boiler, blend two tablespoons of flour with a little cold milk until perfectly smooth. Add to the milk in double boiler. Allow to cook fifteen minutes.

AMATEUR PICTURES ENLARGED AT HOME

It is an easy matter to enlarge snapshots to a suitable size for framing, and it is not necessary to have a lot of fancy and costly apparatus to do it with. Almost any hand camera can be turned into an enlarging camera and fine results can be obtained.

The principal requisite is a room in which all light can be excluded and which has a window that will let in unobstructed light where you want it. A disused attic chamber or a storeroom will be fine. Even the cellar can be used if the cellar has a window that admits a lot of light. Cover the glass in the window each with black paper and make it absolutely light tight, except for one place that is just the size of the camera box. If the window sash has four panes of glass it would be well to take out one pane for this purpose. Fit your camera tightly into the opening. If possible let this really be a hole in the window. You can then add to the light by equipping your camera back with are reflecting mirror.

Fit the back of your camera to the opening in the window and see that there are no leaks of light around it. The entire amount of light let into the room should come directly through the camera. Put the plate or film which you are to print in a plate holder or printing frame and attach it to the back of the camera so that the light will come through it and pass into the camera. Fix your plate or film with the image upside down.

Then place a table near to the window and put an easel or drawing board upon it so that the beam of light passing through the camera will fall on the board. Close the shutter of the camera. Pin a piece of bromide paper to the drawing board while the light is excluded from the room, and when all is fixed open the camera. The light passing through the plate and then the lens will print the image accurately on the bromide paper. The size of the enlargement depends on the distance the drawing board is from the lens. When you have your picture printed as you desire fix it in the way prescribed for bromide papers and your enlargement is finished.

Simple, isn't it? And yet it gives the finest sort of results.

BLUNDERS IN NOVELS

Women Writers Have Made Some Amusing Mistakes Writing of Sport

That popular novelists make all sorts of funny mistakes and perpetrate marvellous anachronisms when writing their tales is well known. Dickens, Scott, Thackeray, Reade, and so on, even Mrs. Florence Barclay, have all fallen into the trap. But in nothing are so many laughable blunders made by novelists as in relation to sport, and this is particularly the case with women writers.

"Ouida" was probably the most astounding of all great story writers of her sex in this respect. Speaking of one of her heroes who was taking part in a famous boat-race, "Ouida" makes this astonishing statement:

"All in the boat rowed steadily, but none rowed so fast as number six."

If "Ouida" has any blunder to surpass this amusing error in a sporting contest, it may be found in her description of a great horse-race wherein her heroine is supposed to be the owner of the winner. And, this horse having won, the female novelist goes on to show the sensation made by the lady owner when "she came proudly into the paddock, leading the winner of the Waterloo Cup." The Waterloo Cup is the trophy awarded for the finest dog-race in the world.

Even Marie Corelli is not always accurate. Says she, in "The Treasure of Heaven," when her hero is speaking in that book:

"After school-hours I got an evening job, with a shilling a week, for bringing home eight Highland bull-heifers from pasture." Bull-heifers, indeed! What sort of creatures are they?

One of our living women novelists made her readers wonder, especially those of them who were swimmers or sailors. Indeed, the feat her hero achieved—according to her story—ought to be immortalized in letters of gold. The hero was supposed to have jumped headlong into a raging river to rescue the heroine and the following way is how he did it:

"With one hand he held her lovely head above the seething waters, and with the other, he called loudly for help." Another feminine novelist makes her hero win the English Derby and astonish his friends by his prowess at partridge shooting two days later, regardless of the fact that the Derby is run early in June and partridge shooting does not begin till September.

SIZES OF SILOS

Depend Upon Amount of Silage Required—How to Determine

The amount of silage required and the size of silo needed to hold it can be quite closely calculated provided the number and kind of animals to be fed from it are known before building.

An average cow or beef animal may be fed about thirty-five pounds of silage per day and the usual period during which silage is used in this latitude will be about 210 days. Large animals, or those that are being fattened, may consume considerably more than thirty-five pounds per day, but this has been found a fair average.

In a silo of ordinary depth, the average weight of the silage is about forty pounds per cubic foot. Near the top of the silo, however, where the pressure is not great, it will weigh only twenty-five pounds per cubic foot, while at the bottom of a thirty-five foot silo it may weigh sixty pounds. Taking these averages, if a cow eats thirty-five pounds of ensilage in a day, she will eat thirty-five fortieths, or seven-eighths, of a cubic foot per day; and with this as a basis it is easy to determine the number of cubic feet of ensilage required to feed a cow or any number of cows throughout the season. The diameter of the silo must be such that the stock on hand can use one or two inches of silage off the top each day during the winter and at least three inches per day when summer feeding of silage is to be practised. This is necessary to keep the silage from spoiling.

A silo ten feet in diameter is sufficient for feeding ten cows [illegible]. One twelve feet in diameter will feed [illegible] head, and one fourteen feet in diameter will meet the needs of twenty head; but if there are thirty or more cows to feed a [illegible] silo should be erected. These silos should be thirty or forty feet, or even more in height.—A. D. Wilson.

IMPROVED BROILER

Revolves on Pivot and Meat Can be Done on Either Side

An improved type of broiler for gas ovens has been invented. It can be moved up and down in the oven and turned about so that the meat is done equally on both sides. The broiler proper is pivoted to a framework that moves up and down in grooves on the inside end walls of the oven. By a lever outside this framework is operated. Like most broilers it is in two hinged sections that receive the meat between them. When they are locked the device can be revolved at will. A removable drip pan sets in the lower portion of the framework to catch the drippings from the steak, or chops, or whatever the meat may be. The advantage of being able to move the broiler up and down is that you can get it close to the flame or some distance off, according to whether you want it done quickly or slowly.

ORIGIN OF PAINTS

Ground up Mummies Furnish a Beautiful Brown Color

In order to furnish the innumerable delicate tints of paint required by artists, manufacturers have nowadays to ransack the world. Even mummies are called into use. Mummies are usually preserved in the finest bitumen, and this ancient bitumen has, in the course of centuries, turned the mummies a leathery-brown tint. It has been found that when the bitumen and the shreds of mummy are ground down by machinery, a beautiful brown pigment is the result —exactly the tint required for painting certain shades of brown hair.

Sepia is one of the commonest of artists' paints. It is a deep brown in color, and comes from a source equally strange. It is prepared from the black, inky fluid discharged by the cuttle-fish to blind and baffle its enemies.

Raw sienna is soil from near Sienna in Italy. Burnt sienna, another common tint, is simply the same earth burnt.

The majority of pigments for making colors—that is, the dry powders—are obtained from minerals, but many pigments come from the animal kingdom. Cochineal, for example, comes from the dried bodies of insects. A kind of pitch is also used for certain pigments.

Our Friend the Cow

Of all animals the cow is meant to be respected by man. She is more closely allied to him in her relations than any other quadruped, and in fact was brought across the ocean by him when he began to settle upon the American continent.

The most common name for a place in England is Newton, which occurs no fewer than seventy-two times.

WHIPPET RACING AN ENGLISH SPORT

Speedy Little Animals Very Popular in North—They Get the Very Best of Care

In England, the racing dog, or whippet, might almost be called the poor man's racehorse, for these races are particularly popular amongst the workingmen in the North and Midlands, and also, to a lesser degree, in the South. The whippet resembles a miniature greyhound; he wears a neat cloth coat and a perforated leather muzzle. This prevents him from picking up stray scraps of harmful food, which would not be good for him when training. It also prevents "doping" just before a race.

The different competitors in a race are distinguished from one another by means of different colored collars; and, in order to judge the winner, the judge has a small pit prepared in a line with the winning-post, so that, when he gets into pit he is on a level with the dogs, and can see which first crosses the line without any difficulty.

The length of a whippet race is generally from 140 to 200 yards, and the heavier dogs are handicapped when racing against lighter competitors. Each dog is held by a man who acts as starter, and this handling of the whippets is in itself quite an art. The starter holds his dog by the back of the neck and the base of the tail. At the sound of the starting-pistol the man slightly raises the dog from the ground, and tosses him forward. The idea is to drop the dog so that his hind legs touch the ground first, and he can then take up his stride at once.

A good whippet will complete 200 yards in 12 seconds, or 16 yards 2 feet per second. Whippets are trained to race by means of what is technically known as the "rag," or, in other words, a piece of cloth. The animal is taught to run to the man who waves a "rag" at him, and it is in order to reach the rag-wavers that the whippets run down the racecourse at full speed.

The men with the rags stand on the far side of a line ten yards beyond the winning-post. The rag-wavers are placed thus, instead of standing at the winning-post, because the dogs then pass the post going at full speed. If the rag-wavers stood at the post, the dogs would naturally slow up before they reached them, and the race would consequently be spoiled.

The little whippet has a very good time in his master's house. He is very carefully looked after, and is often the pet of the whole family. His diet probably consists largely of bread and mutton, and he is taken out for systematic gallops after the rag. He is groomed as carefully as a racehorse by his devoted owner.

TENNIS FOR LONG LIFE

Thirty Ex-champions Sat Down Together at Banquet

In point of physique and weight, Maurice E. McLoughlin is the most youthful tennis champion the United States ever had. He is only twenty-three years old, and at his best playing weight he tips the scale at 150. The muscular though short Beals C. Wright, the strong William A. Larned, the tall, graceful William J. Clothier, all were mature when they carried the laurels now held by McLoughlin, and all of these champions of a few years ago scaled, when playing tennis, at over 160 pounds. Wright, on one occasion, lost eight pounds in one championship match.

No stronger contrast of tennis champions was ever presented than when, with the exception of three, every champion of the United States for the past thirty-three years sat around a table to celebrate the return of the Davis Cup. If any recommendations were needed for tennis that table loudly voiced its claim. There is probably no other sport that can show such a clear roll-call of champions for a similar length of time. McLoughlin promises to be another physical advertisement for tennis. He is rugged and strong, never afraid of donning the gloves in a friendly bout and can hold his own in a number of other sports. Certainly his physique belies any hint that tennis is a game for the weakling.

CHANCE'S BIG INCOME

Some eight years ago Frank Chance was made manager of the Cubs. At that time he had a bank account of $7,000. When Charles Taft and Charles Murphy bought Hart's interest in the Chicago team they declared Chance in for 10 per cent. of the stock. He paid for it with his dividends. Chance admits that he is now worth $300,000. For looking into the lens of a moving picture camera for 25 minutes he was paid $1,000. His salary for his first season with the New York Americans was $25,000. He owns a [illegible] orange grove in California, and modestly calculates that his yearly income is about $55,000.

Must Pay Real Players

"You can't do anything with cheap talent," says Frank Chance, manager of the New York Americans. "You've got to pay top-notch players big salaries to keep them going. I'd rather have [illegible] men on my club than fifty $2,000-a-year men. The high-priced man usually plays major league ball." Chance's method of rebuilding a team is simple. He believes in buying every man, without regard to price, that appeals to him.

Met After 58 Years.

Mr. Sam McIlroy of Quay's Station near Port Hope, a former local citizen was here on Saturday on business. In conversation with a Times reporter Sam noted that recently he attended a big party near his present location. Among the guests he saw a lady whose face, though wrinkled with advancing years, appeared familiar to him. He spoke to the lady and said: "Pardon me, but are you not Miss—" The lady replied "Yes Sam you remember when last we met just fifty-three years ago. I am still Miss ——". Is this the culmination of a forgotten love story?

No Raise in Rate

Local citizens, who are now paying 26 mills on the dollar will be pleased to learn that it will not be necessary to add an extra mill to the tax rate of next year to overcome the donation of ten thousand dollars by the city to the Peterborough Patriotic Fund. On account of the increase in assessment of $1,336,541, it will be possible to have the same rate as for this year (26 mills) and have $25,000 extra money for other purposes after giving 10,000 to the fund. Without the donation being taken out, the extra amount coming to the city treasury would be about $35,000.

Local Man Writes

On Saturday Mr. Jas. Leber, of 300 Louis street, was in receipt of a post card from Mr. Louis Beaudry, the local pea packer. The card is post marked "Havre, France," and comes bearing a one-cent Canadian postage stamp. Mr. Beaudry says, in part:

"Dear Old Jim:

"Since I saw you last at the station I have seen lots of things which I hope to tell you about some day, I cannot tell you about them now or you would not receive this letter. I shall soon see more now, as I start for the front soon. Please God I shall come back and keep you listening for hours. I am in the English Army as Interpreter. I will soon be in the trenches.

The back of the card has a semi-tone photograph of a devasted Belgian town. Lying about are dead women and children shot down by Germans as well as a murdered priest. Inset are pictures of an English, Belgian, French, Russian and Indian soldier. At the foot of the picture, in French, is an inscription which interpreted, says, "For two months in Belgium, in Poland, and in France we have taken part in the war forced on us by Germany. We will avenge their victims."

NELSON'S LETTERS SOLD FOR $11,000

Love Passages of a Naval Hero—Lady Nelson's Pathetic Plea to Her Husband

Spirited bidding took place at Christie's, London, for a collection of 232 autograph letters of Lord Nelson, chiefly written to Lady Nelson, and they were finally secured by Messrs. Quaritch for $11,000.

This collection of letters is of extreme interest, as it reveals the fact that at the time of his marriage the famous naval hero was really in love with his wife. In one of his letters to her before marriage Nelson wrote:—

"My greatest wish is to be united to you, and that foundation of happiness, real love and esteem, is, I trust, what you believe I possess in the strongest degree towards you. . . . I declare solemnly that did I not conceive I had the full possession of your heart, no consideration should make me accept your hand."

That Lady Nelson on her side made serious efforts to recover the love of her husband after he had become infatuated with Lady Hamilton is evident from the following letter to her husband:—

"My Dear Husband,—It is some time since I have written to you, the silence you have imposed is more than my affection will allow me, and in this instance I hope you will forgive me in not obeying you. One thing I omitted in my letter of July which I now have to offer for your accommodation a comfortable, warm house. Do, my dear husband, let us live together. I can never be happy till such an event takes place. I assure you again I have but one wish in the world, to please you—let everything be buried in oblivion; it will pass away like a dream. I can now only intreat you to believe I am most sincerely and affectionately your wife, Frances H. Nelson."

MOST WONDERFUL RELIC

Coronation Chair Built in 1300 by Edward I.

The Coronation Chair, which the suffragettes endeavored to destroy by bomb, is in itself and its associations probably the most wonderful relic in the world. For six centuries it has rested within the sanctuary of Westminster Abbey.

The chair was made in 1300 for Edward I, [illegible] in wood at a cost of [illegible] and providing a chair cover.

The seat is the famous "stone of fortune," on which the luck of monarchy is fabled to depend. According to the legend, the stone was that upon which Jacob rested his head at Bethel, and it was carried by Pharaoh's daughter, whose heart Moses had touched, to Spain, whence it was borne to Ireland and then to Iona. There is little doubt that St. Columba laid upon it his dying head.

The Scottish King Kenneth took it to Scone and enclosed it in a wooden chair. On it for four centuries Scotland's kings were crowned, till Edward I. captured it and carried it off to his shrine of Westminster.

"The Coronation Chair," said Dean Stanley, "is the one primeval monument which binds together the whole Empire. The iron rings, the battered surface, the crack which has all but rent its solid mass asunder, bear witness to its long migrations. It is thus embedded in the heart of the English Monarchy—an element of poetic, patriarchal, heathen times."

Invalid Saves Boy

Great heroism was displayed at Wheelock, near Sandbach, by an invalid man named Haynes, who plunged into the canal to save a boy named Bickerton, who slipped into the water while reaching for buttercups. Haynes recently underwent an operation at Nantwich Infirmary, and suffered severely from the effects of his immersion. After rescuing the boy (none the worse for his experience) Haynes had to be pulled out of the water and for some time lay prostrate.

Lancashire Police Hoaxed

Dragging operations were commenced by the police on the finding of a man's coat and a note on the banks of the canal between Bury and Radcliffe, but after some hours they received word that the man who was supposed to have written the note had been seen at Bury, so the dragging was stopped.

Solicitor's Dive to Rescue

While taking part in a race at the New Ross Regatta one of the boats was upset, and a man, who was unable to swim, sank. Mr. T. A. Colfer, solicitor, dived to the rescue without divesting himself of his clothing, and brought him ashore.

Sightseers Hoaxed

Some 3,000 people were attracted to Irvine Harbor to witness the departure of a shipyard worker in a 16-foot open boat in an attempt to cross the Atlantic. At the time announced for the departure there were no signs of him or his craft, and all inquiries failed to discover his whereabouts. Amongst the crowd were many cameramen, some of whom represented newspapers, while many of the spectators had travelled as far as from Glasgow to witness the departure.

Quick Marriage; Quick Release

Married on the day after he proposed, Mr. Douglas Duncan Beddie, an Aberdeen granite merchant, was left three days later by his wife because he remonstrated with her for speaking to a former sweetheart. He was granted a decree in the Scottish Divorce Court at Edinburgh.

Selfish Cricketers

Dr. Lyttelton, headmaster of Eton, speaking at a meeting of the Duty and Discipline Movement at Lansdowne House, said that the decline of cricket was due to selfishness. "It is the selfishness of the batsmen which has made the game intolerably dull, and I am glad to find that the gate money is falling off," he said.

WILL SWEEP THE SEAS OF GERMAN RAIDERS

Buenos Ayres, Dec. 11.—Additional reports of the engagement off the Falkland Islands received here today state that the British fleet included the second cruiser squadron attached to the home fleet, composed of the Cruisers Shannon, Achilles, Cochrane and Natal. The sinking of the German cruiser Nurnberg was run down after a chase; she refused to surrender and fought gallantly until she sank. The Dresden met a similar fate eight hours later. The main engagement off the Falkland Islands lasted for five hours.

The German reports declare that Admiral Von Spee and the officers of the fleet realized from the first that they faced certain destruction when they saw that they had been caught between the Japanese and the British fleet. The Germans immediately spread out and prepared to fight to the last man. The Nurnberg and the Dresden being light cruisers and the swiftest vessels of the German fleet, managed to keep up a running fight for several hours.

The cruiser Karlsruhe and the converted cruiser Kronprinz Wilhelm, which were in the vicinity, have fled. The British fleet, according to the latest reports, have captured the crews and sunk the colliers and several [illegible] which were carrying [illegible]. If these reports received by telegraph are true, it is expected that the Karlsruhe and the Kronprinz Wilhelm as well as the Prince Eitel Frederich, will soon be rounded by the British as well. Deprived of auxiliaries the cruisers will soon be rendered helpless owing to a shortage of coal and supplies.

THE REAL TEST

There is no surer test of the real success of the management of a Life Company than the feeling of its clients, the policyholders, towards it.

How the Canada Life Stands the Test

The Company is constantly receiving letters expressing gratification for increasing policy dividends, appreciation of generous treatment by the management, or grateful thanks for prompt payment of claims.

In Illustration

A CHICAGO BANK PRESIDENT lately wrote: "This dividend is particularly gratifying . . . and reflects great credit on the management of your good Company."

SIR WILLIAM WHYTE'S EXECUTOR wrote: "I have to thank you very cordially for the promptitude with which you settled our claim."

A PHILADELPHIA POLICYHOLDER says: "Your methods seem to make a friend of a policyholder, and I assure you that after dealing with your company fifteen years or more, I feel enthusiastic of your worth and kind treatment."

These letters are not exceptional; they are typical of those being received nearly every day.

British Submarine Dives Under Mines and Sinks Turkish Battleship in the Dardanells—The Allies Are Forcing The German Armies to Retire

DARING ATTACK BY A BRITISH SUBMARINE IN THE DARDANELLS

Turkish Battleship "Messudieh" Torpedoed and Sent to the Bottom--Submarine Dived Beneath Five Rows of Mines to Reach Her Enemy. Lieut.-Commander Holbrook Was in Charge of the Victorious Submarine

London, Dec. 14.—The Admiralty today announced that the Turkish battleship Messudieh has been torpedoed and sunk in the Dardanelles. The Messudieh was attacked and sunk by a British submarine yesterday.

The Messudieh was an old battleship carrying six hundred men. She was built in 1872, and reconstructed in Genoa in 1903. Her displacement was about 10,000 tons.

The Messudieh was sunk by the British submarine B11. In accomplishing the feat the vessel dived under 5 rows of mines. After launching the torpedo which struck the Turkish war ship, the submarine escaped.

The submarine B11 was in command of Lieut. Commander Holbrook, and was built in 1906. One report of her feat in the Dardanelles says: "Although pursued by gunfire and torpedo boats, the B11 returned safely after being submerged on one occasion for nine hours. When last seen the Messudieh was sinking by the stern."

The Allies are Forcing Cermans Out of Belgium and France

Paris, Dec. 14.—The French official communication given out in Paris this Monday afternoon reads, as follows:

"There has been nothing of importance to report between the Sea and the Oise.

"In the region of the Aisne, to the northwest of Soupir, the enemy bombarded our entrenchments most violently. We replied and demolished his positions. There was infantry attacks from one side or the other.

"Our artillery destroyed an important field work of the enemy in the vicinity of Alenlise.

"In the Argonne, at the north of Lagrurie, we have made slight progress by the use of mines. There were no attacks from the enemy.

"On the heights of the Meuse there has been violent cannonading; batteries of the enemy would appear to have been moved to positions farther north.

"In the Woevre district, after having occupied a line of entrenchments, a front of 500 yards, in front of Mortmare, our troops repulsed two violent counter attacks.

"In Alsace our advance has brought our front to a line that passes 425 yards to the north of Steinbach, thence to Point D'Aspach, and thence to Pont De Brinighoffen, 1,500 yards to the west of Hellegen."

Paris, Dec. 14.—The French attack in the Woevre region is forcing the German retirement northward on a diagonal line between the Meuse line of fortresses and Metz. This is indicated today in the official communique from the war office. A continued advance of the French forces is reported, 500 yards of the German trenches having been taken yesterday.

Rome, Dec. 14.—Two Austrian torpedo boats are reported to have been sunk in the Adriatic, according to messages received here from Triest today. The torpedo boats were on route to Lissa, when they were probably in collision with mines, the message states. The crews of both vessels were lost.

TURKS ARE IN A LOSING FIGHT AGAINST THE RUSSIAN ARMIES

Everywhere Repulsed and Being Driven Beyond the Euphrates, With Severe Losses--In Turkish Armenia Christians are in Danger Because of Their Sympathy With Russia--Armenians Hanged in the Streets

Petrograd, Dec, 14.—Continued success in the operations in the Caucasus is claimed in an official statement issued today, which says: "Throughout December 11 there was fighting in front of the villages of Pyrauzik, Emme and Dostak. The enemy was everywhere repulsed and p[illegible] yond the Euphrates, with severe losses."

London, Dec. 14.—A Petrograd despatch to The Times says'

"Advices from the front at Erzerum Turkish Armenia, describe the position of 20,000 Christians there as precarious, because of the Russian sympathies. Three hundred thousand Turkish troops are mobilized at Erzerum. Hundreds of Armenians have been imprisoned and many of them hanged in the streets, without trial, as examples. Nevertheless, remarkable anti-war demonstrations have been held in Erzerum, on one occasion the rioting lasted for several hours."

Berlin, Dec. 14.—Today's official statement announces that the Russians are putting up a stubborn resistance in Central Poland, although it says that the Germans are making favourable progress.

ADDRESS BY HON. W. H. HEARST TO THE PEOPLE OF ONTARIO

I desire in the first place to express my deep appreciation, and that of my colleagues, of the sympathy so generously extended by the people of Ontario, and indeed, of Canada generally, on the death of our late beloved and gifted leader, Ontario's most honored and trusted citizen.

Sir James Whitney passed away genuinely mourned by the people of the Province after a distinguished and successful career, such as it is given few men to enjoy. But while he has gone from us he has left a record of good deeds and of legislation for the development of the Province and the betterment of its people that will be an inspiration for generations to come.

It will be the aim, object and determination of the new Government to carry out the splendid traditions of government Sir James has bequeathed to us, to maintain unimpaired the many great works he has accomplished, and to carry to completion the works inaugurated and the plans devised by him for the benefit of the people of the Province and the development of its resources. Above all, we will maintain unsullied and unimpeached the high standard of clean, honest administration of public affairs set by him.

The legislation enacted under the guidance of Ontario's late Prime Minister has been so beneficial, and the works carried out under his direction so ample and complete, that his successors might well be satisfied to follow the trail that he has so well blazed out for them.

But complete and beneficial as the legislation and works of the late Government have been, a Province blessed with such limitless resources of field and forest, of mine and river, of lake and waterfall, and people of such a splendid type of manhood and womanhood as ours, constantly requires new measures and new laws for the development of its resources and the comfort and happiness of its people. The present Government will strive to meet these requirements to the full, and we will not hesitate to break new ground when the needs of the Province demand.

By earnest consecration to the interests of the people, by the efficient discharge of our trusteeship, and by wise and progressive legislation suited to the needs of this much-favoured Province, we hope to retain the confidence, respect and support of the people of Ontario which were enjoyed to so marked a degree by the late Government of Sir James Whitney.

We have not yet had time to give thought and consideration to new questions and subjects that may demand attention, but I desire at this my earliest opportunity, to assure the public that the policy of hydro-electric development inaugurated under the Whitney Government and carried to such a triumphant success with unexampled energy, zeal and devotion to the public service by Sir Adam Beck, will be carried on with unabated vigor, until the boon of cheap light, cheap heat and cheap power is available to every section of the Province and to every class of the community, to the toiler on the farm as well as the dweller in our towns and cities, so far as it is practicable and feasible to accomplish this.

I must not let this opportunity pass without making public acknowledgement of the great debt of gratitude owed by the Government, the Conservative party, and the Province generally, to Dr. Pyne, the Minister of Education, for his self-sacrificing devotion to and untiring care for our late Premier during his illness, and also for the splendid public service rendered by him during the many trying weeks when, as acting head of the Executive Council, the responsibility for the administration of the affairs of the Province devolved upon him.

My colleagues, Mr. Foy, Dr. Pyne, Mr. Hanna, Mr. Duff Mr. Lucas, will preside over the same Departments as heretofore, and the public may depend upon these gentlemen continuing to give that splendid, conscientious service in the administration of these Departments that so largely assisted in making the proud record achieved by the late Government. Mr. MacDiarmid, who becomes Minister of Public Works, and successor to Dr. Reaume, brings marked ability and special capacity for work to the service of the Province.

The splendid work carried on in the past by Mr. Hanna in the treatment of prisoners and the care of the insane and mentally defective will be maintained by him, and it is our confident hope that Ontario will continue to lead the world in humane and business-like treatment of these classes.

Agriculture, the great basic industry of the Province, will always receive the first consideration of the Government. An active campaign has been inaugurated, and will be pressed on with increased vigor, to stimulate a greater production of foodstuffs so urgently required now by the Empire as well as for home consumption. Additional efforts will be made to secure for the consumer the products of the farm without any unnecessary advancement in price over that obtained by the producer.

The work of developing our great heritage in Northern Ontario will proceed with added zeal and energy.

Education, alike primary and secondary and in its higher branches, will receive the same careful attention as in the past, and no effort will be spared to equip in the best manner possible our boys and girls with that knowledge that will best fit them for the battle of life.

The management of our finances at this trying time in the financial history of the world will receive most thoughtful care and consideration. Stock is now being taken of the value of our natural resources, particularly our timber, from which a very substantial portion of our revenue has been derived in the past, and it is expected at an early date we will have as complete information as possible with reference to the natural resources of the Province, so that we may be the better able to determine the value of these resources from a revenue-producing standpoint for the future, and the best means of conserving and dealing with them so as to secure the most beneficial results as well as for ourselves as those who come after us.

The welfare, comfort and happiness of the people will always have our care and consideration, and all such measures will be taken and legislation enacted as circumstances may require and experience and investigation commend for the social and moral welfare of all classes of our citizens.

We will feel it our duty to aid the Motherland in whatever way we properly can while she is engaged in her present titanic struggle on behalf of humanity.

And we will do all in our power to stimulate trade and to minimize so far as we can the suffering caused by unemployment.

Conscious of our many failings and of our liability to err, we will give to the service of our Province the very best that is in us, following the light of duty, as we see it, with singleness of purpose, seeking such commendation and support as duty, faithfully done to the best of our ability, may merit.

Just a personal word in conclusion. I am deeply grateful for the opportunity I have been given of serving my native Province, of which I will endeavor to prove worthy, and I am thankful for the many evidences of confidence and support that I am receiving daily from all sources.

Yours sincerely,

W. H. HEARST.

GERMANS AND AUSTRIANS QUARREL OVER PROGRESS OF THEIR CAMPAIGN

New York, Dec. 14.—Differences apparently have arisen between Germany and Austria, concerning the progress of the Austrian campaign. This is the only possible interpretation of the public rebuke which has been inflicted upon the Austrians by Berlin's week-end official report of the conditions in the war zone. The immediate cause of the German outburst is probably the collapse of the Austrians' offensive in Servia. There is much mystery about Servia's counter offensive which is now so successfully developing. Servia is apparently pushing Austria out of the country again.

Turks March Barefooted Through Snow

London, Dec. 14.—Frederick Rennett, the Daily News's correspondent, wires from Petrograd;

C.P.R. CANADIAN EXHIBIT

Will Have Series of Moving Pictures At Panama Exposition

Mr. L. O. Armstrong, who is connected with the Department of Natural Resources of the Canadian Pacific Railway as official lecturer, speaks enthusiastically about the forthcoming Panama Exposition. He has been engaged for many months making a collection of moving pictures, to be exhibited there next year. The moving picture man, under the supervision of Mr. Armstrong, has covered every inch of the ground in the Dominion that will have the effect of attracting the settler and the tourist to Canada. The pictures will be demonstrating built, irrigated and non-irrigated, all the industrial resources and water-power, minerals and forestry. The delightful scenery of the Rocky Mountains will be one of the principal attractions and so extensive are the pictures taken, that it will be possible to give a complete change every day each week. The performances will be continuous throughout each day, and it is scheduled to give at least eight addresses in connection with the Exhibition the a day. In order to facilitate the work British Columbia government have promised assistance in the shape of a capable assistant, and it is likely that each of the other Provinces throughout the Dominion will do the same, as the pictures cover the Dominion from the Atlantic to the Pacific. Despite war conditions Mr. Armstrong states that there is a continual stream of settlers making their way from the State of Washington and Oregon into Alberta and Saskatchewan and his extensive travels through the United States led him to believe that it would be unwise for people who are contemplating immigrating to any of the larger cities with the idea of seeking work would not better their position. It would be better to remain at home and live cheaply until times take a turn. And he believed they were doing so at the moment.

Suppressing the Toothsome Winkle

"Yer fancied winkles and a pot 'o tea,
Four 'ad,' I murmured, "'s good enough for me."

So Albert Chevalier, used to sing years ago. But, alas! the humble winkle is threatened with banishment from the homes of the thousands who enjoy these delectable morsels on a Sunday afternoon. It is proposed in a Bill entitled The Weekly Rest Day Bill, now before the House of Commons, to stop the sale of everything after 10 a.m. on Sundays.

Should this Bill become law the winkle and shrimp merchant will be hard hit, for it is estimated that $170,000 of the $250,000 spent yearly on winkles and shrimps in the wholesale markets represents the Sunday afternoon supply to the retailers. Therefore if the selling of winkles and shrimps on Sunday is stopped, the trade is practically extinguished.

That is why the London costermonger is not a little agitated at the moment, and why he is organizing a strenuous campaign in defence of the winkle and shrimp trade. And doubtless thousands who are fond of winkles and shrimps will have something to say on the matter, for, as a prominent Billingsgate salesman points out, winkles and shrimps are mostly retailed by hawkers, costermongers and small shopkeepers, and their customers are almost exclusively people of the poorer districts.

Longevity in County Antrim

During the course of a Local Government Board inquiry held at Ballyclare relative to making a closing order for Rashee graveyard, a great many claims for the right of interment were made on behalf of a large number of people aged over ninety years, and one person aged 104 years, all resident in the locality. In one case a man made a claim for himself and two sisters, all aged over ninety, and for a third sister, whom [illegible] as the "young one," [illegible] he gave as seventy-four [illegible] many cases evidence was given of [illegible] generations alive in the same family, and evidence of interment in the graveyard about sixteen years ago of a person who had reached the great age of 111 years.

The firkin is about 2 feet in height, with a circumference of about 18 inches. It appears to have been scooped out of a tree trunk, and on its sides are a couple of handles with holes through them—probably for the purpose of passing cords, so that the firkin could be carried on the back. It contained about [illegible] pounds of butter, which was in a fair state of preservation.

bodily death will prove the case. And I have that evidence?

"My father sends me personal messages that are absolutely convincing. I have even seen him, in a form more ethereal and beautiful than his earthly body. And I have talked with him face to face!

"Three weeks after he passed over," she continued, "the first message came. I was resting in the twilight, with my mind at ease. And suddenly I was conscious of father's voice.

"'All that I told you is true,' he said. 'I have entered into the fuller life. We are what we will to be. We have what we have faith in. And all things are possible.'

"He left me with a sense of infinite comfort and trust. He came again, often, and told me many things about his last hours and his present existence, some of which are hard to repeat.

"Father and I were always very close. The bond between our minds made telepathic communication between us common during his life. What is more natural than that his thought should reach me afterward?

"Now, consider these two facts: First, I never get such a message except when I am in sound health. Recently I was ill, as a result of overwork on my books. During that illness I got no messages. There is nothing morbid or pathological about my experiences.

"Second, the messages are their own proof. Father speaks of things that nobody knows except us two. You say that might possibly be self-suggestion—my subconscious mind at work—but the new facts that father adds to the old, things that I could not possibly have known until he told me, clinch the proof."

Love or Native Land

Love or patriotism?

Husband or native land?

This terrible choice confronted two queens when the war-clouds burst over Europe.

Alix of Russia, the blond, blue-eyed German princess of Hesse, who became the wife of the Russian czar, sits on a throne watching a death struggle between her adopted country and her native land. She sees her brothers and cousins arrayed against her husband.

Helene, queen of Italy, the dark-eyed Diana of the Montenegrin hills whom the King married without a dower because of his great love, may see her husband arrayed against her father.

The hearts of these two queens must be rent by a terrible struggle between love of country and love of husband and home. The Czarina's husband will have to fight her brother and her cousins. The Queen of Italy may see the man she loves as the relentless enemy of her father and her sister's husband, the King of Servia.

King Peter of Servia is a widower. His wife, Helene's sister, died in 1890. After her death Helene kept house for him (he was not then king and she did not marry the King of Italy till six years afterwards) and was a second mother to her sister's children.

She was then only 21 and known as the most beautiful woman in Europe. Brought up in her father's palace at Cettinje, the capital of his tiny kingdom in the mountains, she was one of nine children who rode and hunted and helped in the palace housework more as if they were offspring of a poor Highland chieftain than royal princes and princesses.

The young Diana of the Montenegrin hills had no dowry. Because of the family poverty she, like all her brothers and sisters, was made to learn a trade. The girl who was to become the Queen of Italy specialized in cooking and became a pastry chef.

Helene carried her notions of economical housekeeping to Italy with her. She had run her brother-in-law's household on a small sum. She had to, for Peter of Servia didn't have very much money when he was simply waiting for the change of dynasty which made him a King.

So when she became Queen of Italy she cut the food allowance for the [illegible] members of the royal household to 50 cents a day and reduced the salary of the royal chef from $100 to $60 monthly, meeting his indignant protests with the remark, "Why, in my country of Montenegro the minister of war doesn't get as much as $60 a month."

◆

Origin of Entente

Great Britain's stand from the very beginning of the present European situation has been so aggressively pro-French largely because during the closing years of the last century there resided in Paris a Scotchman with an idea. The man was Thomas Barclay, and the idea was the desirability of an entente between the monarchy and the republic.

If any individual (outside of cabinet or ex-cabinet ministers) can tell the world of this momentous entente, Barclay is the man. England gave him his knighthood—he has been Sir Thomas for two years—because of his services in the bringing about of the understanding, while France made him an officer of the Legion of Honor for the same reason. After the signing of the Anglo-French treaty of arbitration in October, 1903, Lord Lansdowne, Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, and Lord Alverstone, Chief Justice of England, gave to Barclay chief credit for the bringing together of the nations, while Paul Cambon, French Ambassador to London, did so at a later date. Lord Alverstone wrote that "no one knows better than I that the signing of the Anglo-French treaty is entirely due to you."

Sir Thomas, who used to be President of the British Chamber of Commerce in Paris, achieved his result in consequence of years of molding of public opinion on both sides of the English Channel through speeches, through the newspapers, through letters, through personal interviews with men in the highest official places, through a set campaign carried forward month after month with profound determination.

In view of the present alignment of the European powers, two facts brought out by Sir Thomas are of peculiar interest. The first is that the alliance between France and Russia, antedating the Anglo-French rapprochement, was entered into largely as a result of hostility to England; the lands of the President and the Czar were both unfriendly to Great Britain at that time, therefore they had in this a common ground of sympathy on which they met and embraced. The second odd point, when Europe's situation of to-day is viewed, is that there was in the beginning no intention on the part of France or England that their friendship should be in the least either a means of defense from Germany or a means of offense against that power; Germany was not considered, the entente being solely to straighten misunderstandings and banish hostility between the Briton and the Gaul. But the entente has changed with age, undergoing evolution with the growing power of Germany.

Cure Children's Colds By External Treatment

Mothers Will Find Nothing So Speedy and Reliable as Old-Time "Nerviline"

It's really a shame to upset a young child's stomach by internal dosing, when external treatment will so promptly break up a cold.

When your boy comes in after play with his feet soaking wet, his throat hoarse and sore, his little chest tight and congested, just apply Nerviline. Give him a vigorous rubbing over his throat, and put lots of Nerviline on his chest and rub it right in. To make Nerviline penetrate more quickly cover his chest and throat with a hot flannel bandage. This treatment WON'T fail. Your boy will be feeling better in half an hour, and you will have the satisfaction of knowing you have warded off perhaps a cold, or grippe, or illness that might have laid him up.

Nerviline is mighty good for preventing colds and for breaking up a bad one, too. For general family use it cures all sorts of external aches and pains—you simply can't beat it. Try it for earache, toothache, neuralgic sciatica, lame back, rheumatism, or lumbago. Wherever there is congestion, inflammation or pain in the joints or muscles, Nerviline will cure mighty quick. The large 50c. family size bottle is so economical, so useful, it should be in every home. There is also a small 25c. size. Dealers anywhere sell Nerviline.

MARCHING STEPS

Longer Steps and More to the Minute Adopted Recently

In marching, the length of the ordinary step of the British army is 30 inches, 75 to to the minute. In "stepping out," the pace is lengthened by 3 inches. Quick march is now 120 paces to the minute, instead of 108, as it was in 1883.

In "double-time" the step has increased from 36 to 40 inches, and the rate from 150 to 180 steps per minute, so that the modern soldier covers 200 yards, while his predecessor of years ago covered 150.

In South Africa, the 19th Brigade, within a period of 30 days, fought 21 times and marched 327 miles. The casualties were between 400 and 500, the defeats nil.

JEWS IN JERUSALEM

How They Have Practically Monopolized Such Trade as Exists

That Jewish immigrants have so well adapted themselves to local conditions in Jerusalem as to "practically monopolise a greater part of such trade as exists" was stated in a consular report on Jerusalem issued in London.

Owing to the non-existence of reliable official records, says the report, it is impossible to give an exact estimate of the population of Jerusalem, and although it is believed that it figures at 110,000, 95,000 might perhaps be a more correct estimate. It is roughly speaking composed of 13,000 Christians, 12,000 Mohammedans, and 70,000 Jews, many of whom are immigrants from Russia.

It is remarked that, in spite of the emigration of many Jews to escape military service, there has still been a marked increase in this section of the population on account of the continuous influx of aged Jews, who come with the intention of ending their days in Palestine.

There has practically been no variation in the size of the British community, which numbers about 250 souls, most of whom are missionaries.

Well Known Sportsman Dead

A prominent and popular East Cork sportsman passed away in Mr. John Evoy, manager of the property of Captain Donelan, M.P., at Ballynona, whose death has occurred at the age of forty-two. Deceased was Master of the Ballynona and Imokilly Hounds, and was a good type of Irish cross-country sportsman.

INFANTRY WEAPONS

Infantry arms consist of the rifle, bayonet and machine gun. The "pom-pom," which figured so much in South Africa, has been withdrawn.

The service machine gun is the .303 maxim, which will fire a continuous unbroken stream of bullets at the rate of 600 a minute, or 10 bullets every second, at ranges of from 900 to 1,300 yards.

The maxim weighs 60 pounds, and its lightness enables it to be carried anywhere the troops can go. It can be taken along roads on wheels, across country on pack animals, or, if needs be, shouldered by a single soldier right up into the firing line.

The weak point of the maxim is that its mechanism is liable to jam and render it useless. In the hands of trained gunners, its destructive power is greater than land mines, bursting shrapnel, cavalry charges, bayonet charges, or any variety of rifle fire.

INTRODUCTION

The Glenaladale Silver Black Fox Company, Limited, was incorporated in 1913 with six pairs of foxes, at $90,000. This Company re-capitalized in 1914, with 20 pairs of beautiful Silver Black Foxes, at $15,000 per pair, making a total capitalization of $300,000.

THE FOXES

Six pairs (one year old) proven breeders, and fourteen pairs (1914 pups), making a total of 20 pairs—all young foxes—good for at least [illegible] years. The Company has bought some of this year's options on foxes with a guarantee that they are pelts [illegible] of the highest [illegible] and very best quality P. E. Island [illegible].

THE RANCH

The ranch is situated on the well known Glenaladale Farm, owned by Major C. McKinnon, formerly the [illegible] of Sir William [illegible], and is only 12 miles from Charlottetown, in a quiet locality sufficiently removed from any disturbance.

THE RANCHER

Mr. Arthur W. McKinnon, our Ranch Manager, has had much experience in breeding foxes, and has the practical knowledge necessary to efficiently manage and care for the animals.

The foxes will be ranched free of charge to the Company for the first year. This means a large saving to the shareholders, as some companies have to pay as high as 25 per cent. of the increase for ranching purposes.

The promoters of this Company [illegible]

The Glenaladale Silver Black Fox Co., Limited, in 1913 guaranteed a dividend of [illegible] per cent. [illegible]

NOTICE

[illegible]

FORTUNES IN FOXES

There is money in fox ranching, more than anything else ever known. It is good for the rich man and good for the poor man. A poor man cannot buy a pair of Silver Black Foxes but he can easily raise $25.00, $50.00 or $100.00. By investing in this Company he gets back his money in at least two years and then he will have an income for life and for his children to come—and after them will be money in fox farming. One of the reasons for this is that P. E. Island has now 85 per cent. of the world's foxes in captivity. For every one pelt that can be raised there are more than [illegible] wealthy people waiting for it in London, Russia, France and America.

PELT VALUES

The Fox Pelts have advanced greatly in price since 1910 and you can see for yourself what money was in them then.

Below are the particulars of sale of a consignment of Silver Fox Pelts, shipped from Prince Edward Island, [illegible] to London, England, and sold there in March, 1910.

[illegible]

These figures may be verified by enquiry to Messrs. C. M. Lampson & Company, 64 Queen Street, London.

SHARES

Shares are selling at $25.00 each, 25 per cent. with application and the balance on or before September 1st 1914.

Simply fill out the application form and mail to Major C. McKinnon, Secretary-Treasurer, Glenaladale, P. E. I.

All cheques must be made payable to "The Glenaladale Silver Black Fox Co., Ltd."

A POINTER

Just to give you a little idea of what the fox [illegible] of foxes means to the investor, we will figure it out for you.

We have twenty pairs of foxes in the ranch and suppose each pair produces a litter of only [illegible] this is equal to [illegible] pairs and at $15,000 per pair it would figure out at [illegible]. [illegible]

We ranch the foxes free for the first year, so that in addition to a guaranteed dividend of 50 per cent., we save you this large outlay of money. [illegible]

THE INVISIBLE FOE

Silent, Deadly Submarines Constitute Greatest Danger in Naval Warfare

Unlike the dirigible or aeroplane, the submarine is invisible. Its periscope or "eye" is so minute an object and is above the water so seldom that the detection and forestalling of a submarine attack is practically impossible. In night attacks, such as may take place when harbors are blockaded, a fleet must keep moving perpetually, and then it is not safe. The submarine, being invisible, can lie in the track of the battleships and deal its death blow as they pass. The strongest searchlights cannot pick submarines up, except when they are running on the surface, and then it is no easy thing to do.

That the submarines are as deadly to themselves as to the enemy is the view accepted by those who serve on them. Leaving out all accidents, it is safe to say that the shock of the submarine's torpedo exploding against the side of a Dreadnought will be, in many cases, sufficient to cave in the sides of the submarine and cause its loss and the death of its crew. A recent test at Portsmouth, showed that 30 pounds of guncotton exploded under water had sufficient force to destroy a submarine within a radius of 100 feet. All defence against submarines is based on a knowledge of their position, either exact or superficial. The Orling-Armstrong torpedo as used by the British navy can be controlled and exploded by wireless. One plan is to direct a number of torpedoes of this type to a spot where a submarine is suspected and explode them when they are near the spot. This is the same idea as the man who takes a ten-bore gun and goes after deer with buckshot. Ninety per cent. of his shot miss, but the others do the work.

It is generally accepted that a submarine detected is a submarine destroyed, and several ingenious plans have been evolved to do away with it. In Portsmouth a short time ago extensive experiments were made with "spar-torpedoes." These are explosives on the end of a long spar, and are carried over the bow of a 30-knot destroyer. The tests were made with a large barrel, to which was fixed a periscope. The barrel was sunk so that just the "eye" would show as the waves washed over it. A destroyer, the Starfish, was sent after it, and on the first trial blew the barrel to atoms.

Dragnets have been tried with success. Destroyers with these great nets between them have been able to catch the submarines, but in several of the tests the destroyers have been technically destroyed by a torpedo from the submarine. Of course, the submarine would have been destroyed itself, but the naval advantage lay with the submarine.

Taking all things into consideration, it is safe to say that there is no defence against the submarine unless it is detected, and as it can remain under water from 20 to 24 hours and has a cruising radius of more than 20 miles, it is very hard to discover.

England has by far the greatest number of submarines, and it is conceded that they are more highly developed than those of the other nations. Her submarine corps has had much experience and is most efficient. There are now about 75 submarines fit for active service in the British navy. Many of these can be carried on the deck of a Dreadnought and slipped into the water just before a battle or an attack on a blockading fleet. Germany has 27 submarines, France 55, Russia 14, Austria 6, and the other European nations have about 20 between them.

Queen a Prussian Colonel

One of the curious touches of the present war, which involves so many royal relations throughout Europe, is the fact that Queen Alexandra is an Honorary Colonel of the Prussian Royal Dragoons. Her portrait hangs in the regiment's messroom and her health has been drunk by the officers after that of the Kaiser and the Kaiserin. Queen Mary is also an honorary German Colonel-in-Chief, and is said to look very well in the gorgeous shako and jacket of the 5th Regiment of Prussian Hussars. It is safe to say that little thought was given to these Royal ladies when their regiments honored the toast to "Der Tag," the day when William might strike at that Empire whose strength, "broad-based upon the people's will," has roused his insane jealousy.

Magnifier on Pencil

Of English invention is a magnifying glass that may be attached to a pencil or engraving tool to aid a draftsman or engraver.

Furnishing the Singer

The invention of an Englishman is a machine to permit a singer to hear his own voice just as audiences hear it.

A Freak of the Wireless

Wireless telegraphy works better on the Pacific than on the Atlantic and experts are trying to find an adequate explanation for the fact.

WELL-EQUIPPED FORCE IS THE SERVIAN ARMY

Little Country Has About the Same Population as Canada But Every Man Must Carry Arms

Under the defence law of Servia, service in the army of that country is for twenty-four years, namely, ten years in the first category or active army, seven years in the second category or reserve army, and seven years in the third category or garrison army. The active army is the Regular Army, in which color service lasts for two years, followed by eight years in the reserve of the active army; this army has "cadres" with a reasonably strong peace establishment, like other regular armies. The reserve army has virtually no peace establishment. The garrison army likewise has no peace establishment, and it is only formed in time of war.

Servia, as it existed before the recent extension, is divided into five divisional districts, each producing one division of the active army and one division of the reserve army; the divisional headquarters are respectively at Belgrade, Valjevo, Kragujevatz, Zajecar, and Nish. An active division on a war footing consists of sixteen battalions, four machine gun companies, a cavalry regiment of four squadrons, and nine field batteries, besides engineers and departmental corps. The active army further includes a cavalry division of sixteen squadrons and two horse artillery batteries; it also includes six field howitzer batteries and nine mountain batteries, besides garrison artillery, railway troops, and so forth. Each of the five divisions of the reserve squadrons, and nine field batteries; the reserve army also includes seven mountain batteries, and possibly some field howitzer batteries. Adding in certain reserve units, not directly available as portion of the field army, the active and reserve armies on a war footing consist altogether of 166 battalions, 47 squadrons, and 122 horse, field, mountain, and howitzer batteries, making up, with engineers, garrison artillery, and departmental troops, a total of about 230,000 men. The garrison army would probably represent about 60,000 more.

The newly-acquired territory has been divided up into five divisional districts with their headquarters at Uskub, Novibazar, Pristina, Istip, and Monastir.

The Servian infantry is armed with the Mauser, the huge captures from the Turks having probably provided enough to arm all the troops available. The batteries mostly have the Schneider Canet gun, but it seems likely that some of the batteries of the reserve would be armed with Krupps captured from the Ottoman forces; they had older guns in 1912. The field howitzers are quite up-to-date, at least in the active army. As far as weapons are concerned the Servian military forces are in fact in a very efficient condition.

UNNECESSARY TO KILL

In Modern Warfare an Opponent Need Only be "Stopped"

In theory, there is no particular need to kill anybody in war; it is only necessary to stop a foeman from reaching a certain point, but he must be stopped; and ever since war began killing has been incidental to the stopping.

The latest type of bullet is constructed on a principle which gives it a pronounced tendency to turn immediately after impact, thus plowing its way sideways through its living target and inflicting a terrible wound.

The rifle of to-day is capable of delivering 30 rounds of aimed fire in a minute. Years ago, an infantryman had to aim at a point twice the height of a man above his body. Now the trajectory of a magazine rifle is so flat that, with the latest type of bullet up to 600 yards' range, there is not enough curve to render any alteration in the back sight necessary.

The modern bullet is a compound, consisting of a core and two parts—the front portion being an alloy of aluminum 90 per cent., zinc 10 per cent., and the rear portion being an alloy of 90 per cent. lead and 10 per cent. antimony.

The bullet is enclosed in an envelope of 80 per cent. copper and 20 per cent. nickel. As many as 6,000 bullets of this type can be fired from a service rifle without wearing the weapon out.

At the sports of the East Anglian Institution for Deaf and Dumb Children, at Gorleston, a blind lad named Cullum won the 100-yards race in 13 4-5 seconds, lowering the school record by a second. He felt his way by means of handles attached to [illegible] the course.

English statistics place the number of automobiles in use in the world at more than 2,250,000, of which more than one-half are in the United States.

Centenarian Recently

The oldest inhabitant of Moffat, Mrs. Johnstone, Violet Bank, died in the 100th year of her age. Mrs. Johnstone was the widow of Mr. Thomas Johnstone, who at the age of ninety-eight predeceased his wife six years ago. The aged couple had spent sixty-seven years of married life together, and thirteen years ago they celebrated their diamond wedding.

A revolving target, on which images of birds are perched until shot down, is a Frenchman's invention.

Nieces of Poet Laureate

There are two relatives of the poet laureate living in Canada. These are the Misses Bridges, nieces of the doctor, who have a five-acre ranch in a delightful part of British Columbia near Mission City. These two ladies came from England some years ago and bought land in British Columbia and have led a retired life since that time, raising chickens and gardening. Naturally they are greatly pleased with the honor recently conferred upon their uncle, Dr. Robert Bridges by Premier Asquith, in appointing him poet laureate.

Tapioca Custard

To one quart of milk add three-quarters cup of minute tapioca. (If pearl is used, it must soak two hours in cold water then drained before adding to the milk.) Put in double boiler and cook twenty minutes. Beat three eggs with two-thirds cup sugar, even teaspoon of salt until light and creamy. Stir gradually into the hot mixture. Add one tablespoon of butter and flavoring desired. Turn into well buttered pudding pan and bake twenty-five minutes in slow oven. Serve with cream or foamy sauce.

Handy Range Attachment

Levers on the outside of a new gas range permit a broiler inside to be moved to any position desired with relation to the heat.

Protecting the Guests

To insure hotels and restaurants serving their patrons fresh eggs, a candling apparatus using an electric light has been invented.

Massage While Lathering Face

In the midst of a new shaving brush there is a rubber massager which may be pressed down by a button on the handle to rub in the lather.

BURIED BILLIONS

Much Money Spent in Draining Lake in South America.

For hundreds of years the world has [illegible] that gold dust and gems to the value of [illegible] lie buried [illegible] Guatavita in Colombia, a territory once occupied by Indian tribes renowned for their fabulous wealth.

The aboriginal inhabitants of that locality had a custom of casting all their vessels and ornaments of precious metal into the waters of the lake as offerings to their gods, and the knowledge of this custom led to the belief that has been handed down through the ages that it was the burying-place of fabulous wealth.

[illegible] ever since the [illegible] was discovered, travellers [illegible] engaged in [illegible] search of the territory, and many attempts were made to drain the lake, without success. The Spaniards were just on the point of succeeding in the task of draining the lake after years of hard work spent upon it; but when they were half-way through, the sides fell in and years of work were wasted. In 1900 an English company undertook the work. They proceeded to drain it by digging a tunnel through the adjacent mountains, bringing it below the level of the surface of the water.

The lake was not emptied until [illegible], but it kept refilling on account of the [illegible] rains and the presence of springs. A number of jewels and [illegible] found in the mud of the lake had seemed to indicate that the search for hidden treasure was to prove successful. Then the mud dried [illegible] difficulty was thus encountered. The engineers continued operations, but no further treasure came to light. [illegible] some $75,000 [illegible] decided to abandon the hunt.

GOLF BALL MAKER

[illegible] on Plunger and Is Pressed Up Against Die [illegible]

An apparatus for imparting to golf balls their peculiar pock-marked configuration has been designed. Arising from a metal base is a metal standard with an overhanging and bifurcated arm. [illegible] of this arm a rotary die is pivoted. Directly below this die is a vertically moving plunger that is operated by a little lever at the side and that has a spring attached [illegible] movements.

[illegible] REVOLVES AUTOMATICALLY

[illegible] plunger is a cup into which a golf ball is placed. By pressing down on the lever the plunger rises and the ball is pressed against the die. The force [illegible] impact is sufficient to set the die revolving and it continues to revolve as the ball rotates against it. This has the effect of turning the ball around in the cup so that it is stamped around its entire circumference.

[illegible] a Ghost

When we hear of anybody having seen a ghost our first impulse is to explain the matter away. There are [illegible] of supernatural visitors [illegible] records of their visits [illegible] allowed to believe in ghosts, says the "Medical Press and [illegible]." A certain house was [illegible] in the best sense of the word. Horrid shapes and shrieks and sights unholy were its nocturnal lot. The inhabitants enjoyed a pleasantly terrified notoriety, and the reporters [illegible]. Enter a sanitary inspector. He found a defective flue which flooded the house with a malodorous mixture of sulphurous oxide, carbon monoxide and other ingredients. The haunted inhabitants were suffering from a chronic intoxication that affected their bodily health and their imagination.

Advance in Lighting

Since the introduction of the incandescent lamp over thirty years ago, the art of illumination has been as [illegible] an example of meritorious study [illegible] its fruits the world has had. From time [illegible] the interval from the great Edison discovery of the property of carbonized filament up to the present, many additions of great utilitarian value have transformed the electric lamp from an experiment into a commodity upon which [illegible] the health, comfort and [illegible] of civilization [illegible] the commercial advantages of which alone have rendered possible [illegible]

Planked Shad

Clean and split a shad, put the skin side down on an oak plank one inch thick, or lay in baking pan. Sprinkle with salt and pepper and dot with bits of butter.

(For a shad weighing three pounds use one-half teaspoonful of salt, one saltspoon of pepper, and two tablespoons of butter).

If you use gas for cooking, place the shad under the broiler flame and cook [illegible] ten minutes, then lower the flame for eight minutes more. Shad may be baked in oven, allowing twenty-five to thirty minutes for a shad weighing three pounds.

ROYAL YACHTSMEN

Aproppos of King George's [illegible] as a yachtsman, it is interesting to note that yachting in bygone days owed much to English sovereigns. Queen Elizabeth, who had a fine pleasure schooner built at Cowes, to William IV., who formed the Royal Yacht Squadron, [illegible] of the Royal yachtsmen was Charles II. [illegible] Monarch owned fourteen yachts, ranging from twenty-five to [illegible] tons, and one of them, the "Jamie," was designed by the King himself and built at Lambeth under his supervision. Charles and his brother James generally steered their yachts themselves, and Evelyn, in his diary for October [illegible], describes a sailing match between the Royal brothers—the first contest of the kind in British waters of which we have any record.

[illegible] everything. It was quite as daunting to face a pistol at twelve yards as to face the sword [illegible] [illegible] with a contrivance of his own invention. He had the life-size figure of a man with a [illegible] hand in which a pistol could be held at the "present," [illegible] the trigger [illegible] in his own belt, he discharged the weapon himself as he fired his own pistol, by [illegible]

Great stress was laid on the importance of aiming at a small object. "Mark well one of the gilt buttons on [illegible] [illegible] object." Which explains why the experienced duellist went out dressed [illegible] [illegible] as the gilt button [illegible]

Bringing into position, the man each held [illegible] well up to the eye and raised his pistol to the proper level, [illegible] [illegible] towards the small object—that gilt button. [illegible]

CRICKET IN ENGLAND

Some Sarcastic Comment by a Lover of [illegible] Sport

When I come across a [illegible] [illegible] the glorious [illegible] writes George Robey in [illegible] the [illegible] of my gladiatorial forefathers [illegible] and I want to [illegible] him.

I don't say that [illegible] cricket is an ideal game from the spectators' point of view, but after all it was [illegible] for the players, not for [illegible] and I don't think I have [illegible] cricket player who has anything to say against the [illegible] dition of the game.

But, of course, if it is necessary [illegible] [illegible] by throwing aside the old traditions and [illegible] that [illegible] are to be secured [illegible]

First of all [illegible] must be discouraged [illegible] our open spaces, because, once cricket is learned by the younger generation and the seed is sown, I know of nothing which will turn a player into a spectator, and so secure [illegible]

But before doing this we must, at [illegible] [illegible] long-drawn-out affairs, and only made necessary by the fact that skill is opposed to skill. But if big [illegible] are necessary [illegible] the enjoyment of those who actually [illegible] a something unworthy of consideration.

Excitement must dominate cricket completely, and so it will be advisable to curtail the time spent on a match and crowd into, say, two hours, an international game, or a County Championship fixture.

We must [illegible] the game by giving each man on the side an innings of [illegible] minutes [illegible]

The eleven scoring the greater number of runs in the allotted period [illegible], of course, be declared the winners. At all matches played in future a [illegible] band should be in attendance. [illegible] I can see C. B. Fry and Jack Hobbs endeavoring to take a ball off the middle stump and place it to leg, whilst a selection of "rag-time" is given.

I have always understood that "money talks"; so [illegible] [illegible] spectacular point of view we must talk and think in thousands. [illegible] in the more refined world of football. [illegible] we want to make the game more attractive to the spectator? [illegible] a game, and [illegible] of sport [illegible] of nothing so full of pleasure.

[illegible] PACIFIC DRY DOCK

Biggest Vessels to be Handled at Prince Rupert When Work Done

Good progress is being made with [illegible] Rupert. The dock, costing $2,500,000, will have an important national value as it will be able to handle the largest vessels, either naval or mercantile, afloat on the Pacific Coast.

The dock [illegible] of [illegible] sections and the first of these to be put in position is 100 feet long and [illegible] 220,000 feet of timber [illegible] construction. The capacity [illegible] displacement of the [illegible] [illegible] will have [illegible] powerful centrifugal pumps, so that when the ship is in place the water can be rapidly pumped out and repair work [illegible] can be used in three separate units or in any combination that is desired.

About the Cross

Although the cross is the symbol of Christianity, and it was used as a religious emblem long before the Christian era, it was not always an object of veneration. [illegible] the insignia [illegible] used the cross [illegible] centuries be- fore [illegible] cross was [illegible] that only the lowest malefactors were crucified. [illegible] obelisks bear impressions of the cross, and the Babylonians and the Assyrians used the cross. The coins of the early Phoenicians were stamped with the cross.

Arguments Advanced by [illegible] Which Says They Would Only Add to Independence

Women [illegible] to remain that they cannot decide whether [illegible] until they have heard both sides, that it is really only the suffrage side which they know. [illegible] [illegible] editorial in the Boston anti-suffrage [illegible]

THE CHILD'S HEALTH

Minor Ailments Should Always Receive Prompt Attention

The child, especially the child in school, [illegible] ailments—sore throat, coughs [illegible] [illegible] minor ailments [illegible] may lead to all sorts of serious troubles if they are not properly attended [illegible] and watch-fully looked after.

Your boy has a cold. Are you trying to get his little frame into such an excellent condition that he can throw it off very readily or are you letting it [illegible] [illegible]

Your girl has a touch of tonsilitis. Are you trying to find out the cause and remedy it or do you trust that it won't recur, or do you think [illegible] that it will cure itself?

Now's the time to do the preventive work. Now's the time to take the "minor ailments" in hand and stop them from becoming anything more serious.

Do you know that when children have any one of these various diseases of the mucous membrane lining the nose and throat, they are much more susceptible to [illegible] [illegible] fever, diphtheria, scarlet fever, small-pox, etc., as the germs which cause these diseases find here a favorable field in which to locate, multiply and develop?

If early attention is given to the small troubles of the child in the home and in the school [illegible] [illegible] will be diminished. The number of grown people whose strength has been hopelessly undermined by aggravated ailments of childhood will be happily decreased. This matter is worth consideration.

CHEW KING GEORGE'S NAVY PLUG TOBACCO [illegible]

ACTORS RISK LIVES BEFORE THE CAMERA

Each big film-producing company includes amongst its artists a number of nerve-hardened players who are specially engaged to take huge risks in carrying out sensational exploits which add realism to spectacular moving pictures.

These men are mostly retired acrobats and circus [illegible] of the [illegible] [illegible] specialize in [illegible] [illegible] These [illegible] feats that even the most hardened [illegible] would hesitate to perform.

Throwing themselves from the saddle when galloping [illegible] horde of riders, they will lie perfectly motionless on the ground, although running a terrible risk of being trampled on by the hoofs of the other charging animals. Another well-known actor, who, in addition to possessing nerve and athletic skill, has his powers of timing well developed, earns a good deal of money through a sensational drop from an express train.

He utilizes this performance in several ways. Sometimes he poses as an escaped convict who endeavors to escape the clutches of the law by a daring jump from an express. On other occasions he indulges in a struggle with another actor on the roof of a moving car, eventually being flung off the train into space.

The manner in which this player accomplishes with safety this daring leap is to fall into a lake that runs at the side of the railway track, for the train on which he does this trick always travels over the same piece of line.

A favorite sensational incident in connection with dramatic films is the falling of a vehicle—generally a motor-car—over a precipice. Many believe that a dummy figure sits at the wheel of the car when it plunges into space. This is not the case, however, for a real actor usually [illegible] in the vehicle [illegible] Quite a number of daring actors are capable of performing this feat without serious injury to themselves. They actually fall over a fairly steep cliff in the car, but just before it crashes to the ground they leap clear into a patch of sand to safety. The motor car is invariably smashed up.

When traveling on horseback over a narrow bridge, he gives a violent sideward spring, which carries him over the parapet of the bridge down to the stream below. This plucky actor has few rivals in the portrayal of this hair-raising feat, for should his spring not be well-judged he could easily sustain some serious injury by crashing up against the masonry of the bridge. This is a favorite trick of J. P. [illegible] who, by the way, used to be a [illegible] rider for Lord Kitchener in South Africa.

OUR BODIES AND HEAT

We Drink Liquids That Would Scald Our Hands

The [illegible] body can stand far greater heat if it is dry than if it be wet, and strangely enough it can stand far hotter liquids inside than out. For example, the average tea drinker sips tea at a temperature of about 130 degrees [illegible] as high as 145 degrees. But he cannot bear his hand in water at 130 degrees, or his feet in water higher than 115 degrees. [illegible] [illegible] 145 degrees [illegible]

In parts of Central Australia men live in an average temperature of 115 degrees in the shade and 140 degrees in the sun, while 151 degrees has been registered. In the Persian Gulf the thermometers on ships vary between 120 degrees and 140. An explorer in the Himalayas reports that he found in December, and at more than 10,000 feet altitude, a temperature of 131 degrees.

Drs. Blagden and Chantrey, two English scientists, desiring to ascertain how high a temperature the human body could stand, shut themselves in an oven in which the heat was gradually raised, and they were able to bear it until the thermometer registered 260 degrees, the boiling point of water.

THE PACKING OF APPLES

British Importers Favor Boxes Rather Than Barrels For Finer Grades

Interviews with British apple importers on the subject of packing in boxes or barrels indicate that the package is becoming a more important factor in trade than formerly, says a report issued by the Canadian Department of Trade and Commerce. "Which is the better package" cannot just be answered categorically. One class of package suits one trade while another style of package is liked by a different trade, a good deal depends on what trade is being catered for. There are certain varieties of apples more suitable for the box trade and others more suitable for barrels. Apples of [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] weight.

A Lindsay Lothario

Lindsay Post: A pretty young girl who it was reported some time ago had been enticed away from her mother's home near Janetville by an ardent swain from Lindsay whose burning love prompted him to take desperate chances to possess the object of his wild affections, has been found. Miss Duval, according to the best authority, is about 13 years of age, and most attractive, with lustrous black eyes which possess mesmeric powers, and are just about the kind that kingdoms have been lost over, and of which the poets in their wild hallucinations write and dream of.

This is the attractive brunette which the South Ward man took the chances upon, or was accused of abducting. For several days her whereabouts was unknown to many, but her mother was most sanguine concerning her safety and communicated with Chief Short. Friday the Chief was notified that the missing beauty was found not far distant from her home at the house of a friend. Subsequently she was taken home.

KARLSRUKE TO KEEP ON RAIDING

New York, Dec. 12.—No word has been received today of the missing steamship Florida, which is 5 days overdue from Havre, with 24 cabin passengers and 15 in the steerage. The agents of the French line say she may be delayed by gales but even if she had been slowed down to seven knots an hour all the way across the ocean she would have gotten into this port early yesterday.

The most likely theory about her among seamen this morning, is that the cruiser Karlsruhe may have gathered her in, stripped her of her coal and provisions and sent her to the bottom. In that event her passengers might not arrive at any port for days to come.

Keep on Raiding

When the Karlsruhe captured and destroyed the steamship Van Dyck recently she sent her passengers to the port of Para, Brazil, on the Asuncion, a little ship previously captured. Count Lierd, Van Issen, in command, told several of these men during the five days' trip, something about the plans of the Karlsruhe.

"We have orders," he said, "to raid British shipping in the South Atlantic as long as possible and when it gets too hot for us down here to go to the North Atlantic do all the damage we can, then either sink the Karlsruhe or intern her in some American port."

This program, it will be seen, would bring the German commerce destroyer in the neighborhood of the French ship.
